What he should not have been allowed to get away with is the blithe claim that "all other Europeans have this covered". They do not. I know French docs in exactly the same place. Try googling Dr Alain Colombie (not for minors). Same Italy, Spain.
As usual, hats off to Germany!

Massed population immunity is required, is desirable & will in due course happen, if we are to arrive at a decent level of protection. Alternatively we could suppress like now for potentially 2+ years (if a vaccine arrives, this will probably be the time to immunity).

Some hospitals do have enough Personal Protective Equipment (PPE), but in most cases, nurses and doctors are forced to wear masks which are far past their effective use, and in some hospitals in central and southern Italy, staff have no PPE at all.

According to PM they are doing 5,000 tests a day ramping up to 25,000 in April. There are 1.5 million NHS employees. So, it will take a considerable time to test everyone. Much better to send entire population home antibody test kits, and focus resources on who hasn't yet HAD it

It's not possible to build ITU quality ventilators in a hurry. They're much more complex than people believe. Not surprising, as many think lungs are like balloons in your chest.
Ventilators are full of special coatings, complex components, sensors, proprietary tech & software.

Honestly, we have no solid idea what the CFR is, in Ital.y. They're testing only those they believe have covid19. As a minority will show symptoms sufficient to warrant hospitalisation, their denominator is way off. We need the antibody data but that's going to take weeks.

Influenza case fatality ratios are typically 0.1% (1 in a 1000).
Covid19 CFR is at minimum 0.5% & can be around 2%.

In both cases, it is the older & already sick that are more likely to die.

Covid19 is more contagious & perhaps 10x more lethal.

We were warned. @RajagraUK · 19m

"We are afraid that 1 million infections with the new virus will lead to 30 deaths per day over the next 100 days. But we do not realise that 20, 30, 40 or 100 patients positive for normal coronaviruses are already dying every day."

Yes, this is possible, too. Oxford group's pre-paper last week suggests this, though poo poo'd by many. We will know only when the anti-covid19 antibody tests are in widespread use.
I don't think it's likely that more than 50% of us have already had it. But that would be great.

The Twitterati might want to read the credentials of the experts here who are hugely concerned that the response to covid19 is more dangerous than the disease.

Even so-called Covid19 deaths are not a reliable number to compute anything because not every person dying with the virus was killed by the virus.

Because we have never behaved that way. Before this outbreak, if an elderly person got an infection, did we say "oh, shame, you would probably die anyway, so we will let you die". No we didn't.

We did, I'm sorry to say. In relation to 'flu, even after vaccination. In that case it's elderly people, the very young & the immune compromised who die. We definitely could reduce it substantially & save 20,000 to 40,000 excess deaths yearly in U.K. alone. But we don't. Why not?

Do you know this mentally-ill-lone-wolf?

He verbally attacked my sister while she walked our family dog.

Example: a younger person gets the virus & develops mild symptoms. A week later, they're admitted with severe breathing difficulties. Unknown to anyone, they've had a fatal pulmonary embolism. That's rare, as is a young person dying of covid19.

In the severe cases there is a lot of multi organ failure and respiratory failure. I think in some serious cases the virus is not confined to the lungs, + there may well be some more generalised inflammation, but I am not a clinical expert.

In the severe cases there is a lot of multi organ failure and respiratory failure. I think in some serious cases the virus is not confined to the lungs, + there may well be some more generalised inflammation, but I am not a clinical expert.

"32 patients required invasive mechanical ventilation, of whom 31 (97%) died."
Is this small sample reflective of the commonly accepted survival likelihood for a person with COVID-19 on ventilation?

It depends on how patients are selected for ventilation, what the machine is (transport isn't suitable for long term use), what is the experience of staff, among other factors. I don't doubt some samples yield v small # of survivors; others, many more.

In massed arrivals needing ventilation I long ago inferred that use of ventilation is a bridge to palliation. That's why 'transport ventilators' are being procured. ITU machines need truly expert staff if you hope to extubate later.

   I have just heard from a U.K. prof who's good friends with many Italian medics. They told him they've trialed & shown convincingly that CPAP/O2 is far superior than intubation/ mech ventilation in covid19 patients. Very few survive ventilation. I'm not surprised. Choose CPAP.

   There are stats in that same Lancet article for non-invasive ventilation, which I assume means CPAP.

If the NHS is so overstretched why doesn't the government get the army to administer the testing also? They have medics, doctors , testing tents & testing facilities etc Common sense surely. Why have them only delivering and throwing some beds into the Excel centre?

Because the army are driving oxygen tank trucks & the training for all activities isn't 5 minutes.
Several top industry names have dropped everything to ensure medical oxygen doesn't run out, even though the use it utterly without precedent.

If you have a Ltd Co registered in England & Wales with a Companies House number, and that company employs someone, you in this case if I've understood correctly, you can furlough yourself & claim 80% of your salary. Ltd Co can pay the 20% if it wants.

A wrinkle is that your company needs to have the cash to pay you. We don't yet know exactly how the continuity grant of 80% will get reimbursed, but it will arrive in due course. So if you want, you can have your Ltd Co take a loan, secure that you will be able to repay the loan.

Brexit is a stupid decision @A48percenter · 43m
That's very simplistic thinking.

Scientists can (at best) estimate the probability of different numbers of hospitalizations/deaths for different policy options.

Governments then decide on their policy based on the level of risk they think is acceptable!

I didn't see the interview, specifically what did Peston get wrong. (Just curious)

My broader point remains that experts can advise in their specific domain, but policy is ultimately the decision of the government!

I'd use it on me, as I'm nosy, but it shouldn't be used on NHS staff to release them back to hospital from self isolation unless they'd already done minimally 10 days isolation & preferably 14.

Your business can borrow the 80% of salary bill. Any sensible lender knows that loan is effectively covered by Govt. I've no idea what interest rate would apply, but it's a solution to short term cash flow.

Apparently Peston has a Ph.D in immunology. He was arguing with a professor about IgG and IgM and antibody testing of coronavirus. It would appear the Chinese told him so it must be true. It's almost amusing. Fortunately Peston got his arse kicked.

If he has a PhD in Immunology he must have bought his doctoral certificate from a correspondence university. It's even worse if he was once a scientist. You might see low amounts of IgM in someone fighting off an infection, but it's a useless test so early.

He asserted that IgM antibodies would be a reliable test for whether someone had the virus today. If negative, back to work. On the contrary, if they'd not had it long, it'd be negative, yet they'd be infectious. Dangerous levels of partial knowledge.

They don't make a mega profit off ticketing. Don't talk about things you don't understand.

Civil Enforcement Officers ticket vehicles to stop people parking and blocking roads

They earn minimum wage and are still being put on the streets while everyone else is safe at home.

No need to do it. Virtually no cars moving. We know that lots of parking fines are marginal as we've all had them, and others are fair cop (ditto). My daughters had five, all for parking outside her flat on an Essex development where there's no through traffic & lots of space.

Equally, if used soon after infection, I assure you, it will give false negatives in every person. If we're quite certain that they've been in isolation for 10 days plus, it's probably a good test (of current infection) but really it's a test of whether you've been infected...

That's a generic safe time to use an antibody test if you're after IgG which you might if the aim was to find out how many have seen the agent. Key point is even IgM isn't instant, it's just much faster than IgG. Interestingly, IgM is 5 molecules tied together. IgG is one.

9,500 applications is a drop in the ocean.

In a typical year our farmers employ 90,000 migrant workers to sow and pick crops, largely because British people can't or won't do the job. It's hard work.

So 9,500 is just a flea bite. Many will be unsuitable or drop out.

His main point is still completely correct. This test is badly flawed if it's aim is to determine if you currently have the virus. You could be Ab positive & have or not have the virus. You could be Ab negative & have or not have the virus. It's not fit for that purpose.

But it's a great test at day 28 (& sometimes earlier). If you're IgM positive, you have had it (might still have). If you're IgG pidorivr, you have had it & do not now (& probably immune).

How has Robert Peston got a job as a political reporter?
My dogs left testicle has more charisma & would add more interest to the debate than his continuous white noise meaningless input.

He was lucky to be at the heart of the banking system just as the GFC blew up. IMO he did an outstanding job for viewers. I read his book on that topic & on the strength of it, moved a half million quid elsewhere. I'm still happy that was a good call, so thanks for that, Robert!

After this, though, he's had a tough time personally (to say the very least) & somehow I no longer know even what he thinks is his area of speciality. It can't be politics as he has abandoned any presence of balance. Sad :(
I'd like his views on risks to economy & 'money' ATM.

The Campaign Against Antisemitism has an answer to the 'litmus test' that the candidates have spoken of, regarding "has the Labour Party addressed the heart of this matter?"
I don't think many members are going to like it.

We need to get to a place where we can find out who has had it, using an antibody test.
No need to routinely test the golden ticket people.
Still need to test those symptomatic using PCR, quarantine & pursue contacts.

I hope it's very brief. If it's not, the human race risks committing economic suicide, by destroying confidence in money as a means of exchange & a store of value. I'm now too old & ill to earn again. I'll be dead pissed off if they debase £ utterly.

The Prof said if you want to determine if you have had an infection, the best time to test for antibodies is 28d post infection. That's not in conflict with the possibility that, in some pats, you can sometimes measure one early kind of antibody.

Great call. MUST be expeditiously dealt with. However, Govt can't do this. Only the GMC can. Govt could certainly ask GMC to prioritise decisions, offer resources if that's a limiting factor. But enough of asking Govt to do something which, properly, is in the hands of others.

Major pro of PR is everyone s represented & every vote counts. Huge downside as I see it is a mushy middle govt forever & little difference no matter who 'wins' elections. In stable times, govt by drift is ok, but in testing times, I like that we can elect something powerful.

Just a reminded to all those thinking of leaving @UKLabour if @Keir_Starmer wins.

We spent 4 years dragging Labour to the left again, don't run away when you're needed most.

If @jeremycorbyn had abandoned the party 25years ago where would be now?

The number of deaths can be predicted with depressing precision. Even in Germany which has done better than any other European country. If we'd locked earlier, epidemiologists calculate we'd break cover at the height of the pandemic. No easy solutions, regrettably.

Immunoglobulin G or M are produced by plasma B cells in response to antigens from coronavirus. But according a professor who knows about these things IgG and IgM take around 28 to be measurable in the blood. The assay can't be used to see if individuals have the infection.

We need to get to a place where we can find out who has had it, using an antibody test. No need to routinely test the golden ticket people.

The tests don't work, that was the latest I had heard about the antibody test Matt Hancock was talking about today. Just another attempt by Hancock to score browny points rather than be honest with the public.

They will work. The only proprietary ingredient required in the simplest test, the one commonly used on scale, (though not point of use) is viral antigen. These can be wild type, genetically engineered etc. Then diluted serum, then labelled anti-human antibody, then reader.

I really hope they do work, as it will be vital to know who has had the virus. I was just saying the last I had heard about the tests purchased were that they didn't work. I'm also worried about the motive for antibody testing above properly testing NHS staff.

I agree with all your concerns. I don't think they'd order so many if they had serious doubts that it couldn't be fixed. It's definitely possible from a tech standpoint.
I also agree that testing for virus / infection is also critical.

Have you done much negotiating under pressure? The supplier will say “we’ve full confidence in our product. If you don’t order, we will sell to someone else our capacity for next 6 weeks”. We agreed an upfront payment & an order for 100% of their production, subject to diligence.

Our ambassador to Pakistan @CTurnerFCO tweeted that up to 100,000 (UK) Pakistanis are based in Pakistan. As per regulations, the UK doesn't provide diplomatic assistance to dual nationals in their home country. However, Labour are demanding we bring them (that wish to) all back

It is the same as ordering windows for a building, you have to get a slot in place or the lead time means you will not get them in a timely fashion.
Same goes for provisional orders on many things, if you miss the lead time, you can't have the lab time and equipment set ready

I need your help in disclosing the real purpose for the lock down.

Scott R. Silverman, CEO VenTeO RFID microchips are much smaller than the chip he is holding.

Overnight, the world changed beyond recognition - ostensibly because of a flu virus. Drug companies joined forces with technology to produce an RFID chip smaller than a sugar crystal - much smaller than the one Silverman is holding.

Israel is attempting to take over the whole world under the pretext of a flu pandemic.

Israel's New World Order requires every man, woman and child to be microchipped.

People are confined at home awaiting a knock at the door. If they open the door they'll see a smiling 'official' who has come to 'test' their family for coronavirus antibodies - and to innoculate every member of their family against their will.

If they don't open the door the smiling 'official' will stand aside while police force the door open. No more smiles.

There is a tiny RFID microchip, smaller than a sugar crystal, inside the vaccine and the aim is to have everyone innoculated asap.

ANALYSIS: PM's rhetoric on testing doesn't match the reality. He said we could "turn the tide" on virus in 12 wks if we followed rules to slow the spread. That was our bit of the bargain. His was to materially scale up testing. So far he's fallen short

My point was that the professor who knows about such things said 28 days

When the evidence seems to suggest that IgM is detectable from 7 days & IgG from 20 days (At 7 days you still have the infection)

So the professor isn't in possession of all the facts in this case

The Prof said if you want to determine if you have had an infection, the best time to test for antibodies is 28d post infection. That's not in conflict with the possibility that, in some pats, you can sometimes measure one early kind of antibody.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 2

His main point is still completely correct. This test is badly flawed if it's aim is to determine if you currently have the virus. You could be Ab positive & have or not have the virus. You could be Ab negative & have or not have the virus. It's not fit for that purpose.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 2

But it's a great test at day 28 (& sometimes earlier). If you're IgM positive, you have had it (might still have). If you're IgG pidorivr, you have had it & do not now (& probably immune).

Then you don't understand the purpose of the antibody test, which if positive, says you've had it and - very likely - are immune. As the % population which is positive rises, the closer the end of this is.

Most unlikely. Animal tests show monkeys which are antibody positive are immune. I doubt they could 'catch & infect' because that involves huge levels of viral replication in the host (which won't happen).

They're playing a very clever game - they know that that is coming at soon and meanwhile apparently 'sloppy' lockdown lets out a bit of pressure getting more herd immunity but slowly. There is absolutely no way the U.K. can sustain a shutdown for more than about 20 more days.

Really positive news.

The Government has provisionally ordered 17.5 million antibody tests.

This is our escape route. We need to get them operational as soon as possible.

It's a big step towards returning to some normality by the summer.

Wonderful. Soon we will begin to sample the population & then understand what fraction of the population has already been exposed to covid19. Reading the literature I believe it's reasonable to expect clinical immunity in seropositive individuals.

Challenge will be, what fraction of population immune would lead Govt to lift lockdown? Even slightly. There is unlikely to be a way out in the next 1-2y that doesn't involve gaining immunity via exposure. World Depression could lead to war, deaths thro poverty, other pandemics.

Not sure that can be correct. When did we first learn of the virus? Even that's not the starting gun. We'd have needed wet information to actually do anything.

It's so commonplace to pick up infections in hospitals & then die from these that it's a significant risk to factor into medical decisions (& I don't just mean the doctor's decision!).

They even give it its own disguising word: nosocomial. It used to be called "hospital acquired infections", so they changed it to something less scary. So that's hospital hygiene sorted.

Good. Point 3 itself has 2 parts (i) testing for current infection via PCR test for viral code & (ii) testing for past infection & presumed immunity via antibody test.
My probably vain prayer is that, once we get population sampling of 3(ii), we're further along than we think.

I made my choice to listen to those who know what they talking about. If you like, risk your life and whatever, I don't care. But please don't take up an ICU bed die to you, " I know better" attitude. Leave it free for someone you might have infected due to your defense.

There won't be proper ICU beds. What you'll get is a makeshift cubicle with an inappropriate ventilator, which will almost certainly shorten your life. I'll happily pass on that stage of dying if I'm in extremis.

I want solid evidence that covid19 is the main cause of death, rather than incidentally present in many deaths. Also, are the deaths in cohort usually well represented in mortality data. There should be emerging clues. The one dataset we are pretty certain of is deaths.

As we will soon learn, the lockdown is disproportionate to the threats to health.
I think the whole thing will eventually be seen to have been an overreaction to a real but small threat
All European countries are still well under usual excess all-causes mortality, even Italy.

The UK's Coronavirus death total of 3645 is now higher than China's "official" figure of 3326.

It really is shameful how both the government and the media knowingly pump out Chinese Communist propaganda, when studies have shown the death toll is at least 13X what they claim.

I'm confident we'll soon have methods for antibody tests. Challenge is releasing a test of value for a few today vs a system that can screen chunks of population but requires a small blood draw vs a yes/no test on a strip. Probably need all 3, different aims at different phases.

It's the race against time which really puts the pressure on.
By Christmas everything will be resolved, but how much can be done effectively in the short term is the real question, with so many lives at stake.

They only allow limited numbers of people at any one time in a supermarket. People generally take much longer looking around garden centres which would make it much more difficult for everyone to get in. You'd' end up with long queues of people waiting very long periods of time.

Sorry, what I said is true. I didn't say "all cause mortality has not risen". It has. What I said was "it's risen less than in all previous same date years". That is true. Why?
Same in all 24 countries contributing to MOMO, even Italy. Why?
What you've shown is the U.K. excerpt.

Yes, that's spot on. But, do you agree that comparison with same weeks 1-13 in all available time series at least has merit, aim being to better discern "is anything unusual happening?"
Scot, Wal, NI are way lower all cause mortality than same period in previous years. Odder yet!

In a town in N Italy they screened blood donors for antibodies against SARS-Cov2. Out of 60 asymptomatic donors 40 tested had antibodies. Herd immunity is already present in Italy.

A small trial was recently run in Italy, in asymptomatic blood donors, no Covid history. 70% were positive in their home built test for anti covid19 antibodies. Apparently they'll confirm & extend through June this year. I hope they publish 'in real time', can't wait till autumn!

Possibly me in late Jan. Sniffle, odd cough, rough swallowing as if eating a pine cone, muscle pains & exhaustion. Lasted 7-10 days. As I recovered my wife went down with v similar. She has never had flu, and maybe one cold in 38 years.

A particular hospital I know of has been stopped from doing any sort of tests because the Govt has stopped the supplier delivering. They are stocked and staffed up with 99% of what they need to carry out 3000 tests per day, and the Govt is blocking the 1%.

No the reagent is part of the stock they have. Machines are needed to extract something from the reagent. The hospital spoke to supplier of machine for more stock, and the reply was Govt had stopped all supply and was sorting centrally.

Alex Galloway @at_galloway · Apr 4

So they've been reduced from a capability to testing 3000 a day to zero, despite having everything needed but one machine. Sorry it's not technical but that's the best I understand the situation. And could be very different in other hospitals.

Some of the best places quickly found CPAP masks + high O2 gave superior results to intubation & ventilation. Latter is high risk even for formerly well. In some case series, 97% die. Former is being stopped in some countries for fear of virus in exhaled breath. A nightmare.

Brexit is a stupid decision @A48percenter · Apr 1

I didn't see the interview, specifically what did Peston get wrong. (Just curious)

My broader point remains that experts can advise in their specific domain, but policy is ultimately the decision of the government!

Well, given that the epidemiologist responsible for the UK lockdown has had to greatly revise his model given the real data at hand. From a reported 500 - 250,000 deaths to an absolute maximum of 20,000.... Pandemic? No!

I don't think that's what's happened. He hasn't changed the model other than to use a much lower Ro, appropriate to lockdown levels of virus transmission.
That said, models are as good as data informing the model. We know too little to be confident. I opposed the lockdown.

Ten Key Pledges to Support Muslim Communities

The Muslim Council of Britain has conducted a detailed survey of its affiliates and wider Muslim communities, including speaking to over 500 Muslims across Britain about the policies they want political parties and the next government to prioritise.

The following represents a consensus view of those surveyed, which have been consolidated into key pledges the MCB seeks from political parties in the 2019 General Election.

1 Tackle Racism and Islamophobia
Adopt the APPG on British Muslims definition of Islamophobia across the UK, defining Islamophobia as being rooted in racism and as a type of racism that targets expressions of Muslimness or perceived Muslimness.

2 Religious Liberty
Defend the right of Muslims – and people of all faiths – to express their faith practical in religious clothing, food and reasonable accommodation of religious observance.

3 Engagement with Muslim Communities
Commit to proactively engage with a broad and representative spectrum of British Muslim communities to ensure a plurality of views are being considered.

4 Safety at Places of Worship
Safeguard visitors at places of worship, by providing support and funding for any

6 Refugees
Encourage the resettlement of refugees across the UK, working with communities to address and tackle issues faced by refugees resettling in Britain.

7 Full Economic, Social and Public Participation in British Life
Bolster democracy by enabling increased participation of minorities and women in politics and public life, addressing the underlying socio-economic challenges in place.

8 Criminal Justice
Address the disparity of treatment and outcomes for BAME people within the criminal justice system. Rebuild trust with Muslim communities by ensuring all counter-terror legislation is evidence-led, non-discriminatory and open to evaluation.

9 Equality in Education
Ensure a fair approach to educational

Pretty moderate set of demands imo, though is 6 asking for refugee entry, or movement once here? I can't see Govt needing to do the latter. Hence my questions.

Scot, Wal, NI are way lower all cause mortality than same period in previous years. Odder yet!

I want solid evidence that covid19 is the main cause of death, rather than incidentally present in many deaths. Also, are the deaths in cohort usually well represented in mortality data. There should be emerging clues. The one dataset we are pretty certain of is deaths.

It's a good thought. Also street killings, though more domestic murders could increase. But, both are small vs all cause mortality. Motor vehs kill five people per day, so 80% fall 'saves' 4 on daily totals.

Why isn't anyone talking about the virus death rate based on population? I worked out the numbers and the death rate in the EU is 4 times that in the USA; it is 7 times the death rate in the USA if we exclude New York. Here is the data that needs to be shared:

Based on https://www.worldometers.info/coronavirus/

Country	Rate
Italy	21.93
Spain	19.97
Belgium	7.14
Netherlands	6.90
France	6.20
European Union	6.10
Switzerland	5.67
Iran	3.61

It's not a competition. Someone might have a reduced or increased death rate per head, and that fact not be down to what the leader did or didn't do.

Doesn't this suggest that most people in the NHS are keener to do a good job than play politics at the worst time in modern history to do it? They know Govt isn't deliberately depriving them of PPE. There's a global shortage without precedent.

He is still almost certainly excreting virus & should not be out in public. In the same way the cabinet flouted their own rules regarding social distancing, they are flouting WHO evidence regarding the infectious period.

> they have recovered, the World Health Organisation (WHO) has warned.
> Those who display symptoms of the virus, which include a fever and a new continuous cough, are thought to be contagious for at least seven days from the first signs.
> However, people who have recovered from the virus and are no longer displaying any symptoms could still remain contagious for up to two weeks.

With respect to WHO, no one knows if what they say is true. They've used a mega abundance of caution. I think if they've got an antibody response, their ability to infect others plummets. Me, I'd recommend a mask (to protect others, just in case).

I have considered it likely that those unexpectedly ill received a larger dose of virus than those who escaped with minor symptoms. There is clinical & scientific rationale for this notion. I worry that massed covid19 wards might be really dangerous for staff. Hope I'm wrong.

Why are we so surprised that Boris Johnson lied when he's been sacked for lying twice before?

As Mayor of London he promised to totally eradicate rough sleeping by 2012; it doubled under his leadership. His 2008 manifesto promised there would be manned ticket offices at every station; he closed all of London's ticket offices. He aimed to reduce transport fares; they increased by 4.2 per cent

In fact she wasn't born into it. It was only because her uncle abdicated that her father unexpectedly became king. He then unfortunately died leaving a young Elizabeth as queen at a very young age and with small children. She promised to devote her life to her country and she has

Furthermore, she dedicated "her whole life, be it short or long". Most people don't do two back to back careers of 40 years, pretty much.

Why would I check momentum for a poll on the monarchy? Bit weird. I don't care if it's not the majority opinion, it will be one day

The number of people who have died of avoidable medical conditions is recorded, but is unlikely to be trivial. I would follow Austria & partially lift restrictions once daily deaths with covid19 clearly falls over the next week.

While curfew was the right thing to do, the time it took to do it sentenced an incredible number of people to death. Furthermore, the govt has ignored WHO advice totally to this day, as well as not providing the welfare so many need to help fight this in their own way.

I disagree. Too early a lock down would not have held - and rule breaking at the peak of infection would have made it worse.
Or so I believe. Neither of us know better.

"just in for routine tests" was an obvious untruth - there are no 'routine tests' requried for coronavirus that require an overnight stay

I understand the wish not to alarm, but surely it's better to be honest about his condition rather than peddle nonsense stories

Best guess is they're examining lung condition in detail. Sounds like pneumonia. Could become systemic. This combination can kill. Regardless of initiating cause. I'm worried because to be worsening at this stage is the strongest indicator of risk of death. Good luck, Boris!!

Xray or scan likely, but don't require a hospital stay.

Regular oxygen treatment could have been given at Downing Street.

Best guess is that he's on a CPAP machine (a step down from full ventilation that doesn't require sedation). Either way, should not be working.

Confirms exactly what my girls have been saying to me the whole way through. The doctors appearing on TV are known lefty activists out to cause maximum damage to the Gov. On the A&E point, heard that too from several sources. It just illustrates how badly the service is abused

It's not a "logical deduction" when you don't have the medical knowledge to make the deductions.

This is literally how conspiracy theories start.

It's very good. If it's not taken for granted, in an abusive sense, it has plenty of capacity & tremendous capabilities. So, yes, I suppose I do - broadly. If it's missing key capability or capacity, state the need rather than "spend more". More could always be spent, everywhere.

The “tax gap” is roughly half white collar & half the self employed / sole traders. Companies’ accounts are rarely overtly fraudulent. Tax base erosion is a difficult issue.

Imperials own figures changed quickly to a much smaller number. Social distancing was not, alone, responsible for that change. And “we all know” that the narrative you’ve posted, once again, is not & never was policy. As it turns out, it would probably have been effective.

If you're correct, there should be excess deaths over prior years. There aren't. Classifying a death as covid19 or not is genuinely difficult, so most countries don't try, and lump them all in that category if they test positive. Despite that, Europeans not seeing excess deaths.

Whatever, because Parliament treated the result as politically binding & made it legally binding through voting first for Article 50 submission & later for the exit agreement which, in turn, led directly to our having left the EU at the end of January.

His statement there is premature. It cannot yet be known to what extent vaccination will be truly enabling. This is because no one yet knows what % of various populations are seropositive for anti-covid19 antibodies. Also, we don't know when a vaccine will be available.

Us recovered - 16,794
Deaths - 9445
Total resolved 26,239
9445 is 35.9% of 26,239
This doesnt account for unconfirmed cases obviously and makes it fairly unreliable.
However, of all US confirmed and resolved cases, 35.9% of people have died.

The USA has tested and confirmed a great many more cases than you list. Also, like many places, the test is biased to those with symptoms. Mayhem with bad symptoms. I do think 1:3 with bad symptoms might die. But it's a misleading stat to let loose on the general population.

By estimates I've heard through my network to respiratory medics in Italy, few of the deaths are, in their view, due to covid19. Most in the stats everywhere are "deaths with covid19". Deaths in homes do get tested and if positive added on. I doubt it's more than 1/3 the cause.

RTA deaths are tiny, 2000 per year, so what 8 a day? If that's cut by a half, take 4 per day off. However, 2000 normally die per day across the nation. Obviously if a region has a high % of vulnerable people, stat will rise. Did you look at MOMO?

According to data.worldbank.org/indicator/sp.d...

the raw mortality in western countries is about 10-12 per 1000 people (all causes combined), Italy 11. Lombardy has 10 million people, so 110.000 yearly. Right? If there would be no seasonal influence, 301 per day. Now look at #COVID19 deaths

I don't disagree regional diffs occur. But you've used all Italy to show Lom now is high. What is Lom usual? My point is that all cause mortality is lower, even in Italy & Spain, than same period in 2016-2019. Covid deaths are far fewer than headline.

We keep being told by the left-wing media, we left it too late to lockdown, that our health service was badly underfunded, we didn't do enough tests, etc and yet we are so far doing much better than France and Italy which are ranked number 1 and 2 in the world for health.

Deaths are counted by the ONS, and (theyre honest), only count those who have died in hospital and those with a confirmed COVID19.
Italy was slow and late.
France is further along the epidemic than we are.

But note it'll take even longer to get a sense of how many of these deaths were CAUSED by #COVID19 directly as opposed to just having COVID on the certificate (as is the case with current @ONS reporting). That's something @ONS is looking into but may take some time to get results

I'm not sure there's any reliable way of getting to "deaths caused by covid19". The data can be cleaned to an extent, but it's genuinely misty.

After what I have been observing for that last many weeks, it's hard to trust. Perspective: we have been dealing with HIV for a long time & still no vaccine. How is it then that a vaccine is developed for C-19 in a few months? 2 diff disease mechanisms but still I wonder

It's widely assumed that they will have success with covid19. I don't know why they are optimistic. Even if successful, the time required for the essential safety tests followed by manufacture of billions of doses will take closer to 2y than any other estimate.

The Government promised a three-week review of the lockdown on Monday. Now they say there won't be one.

A big mistake. The people have kept their side of the bargain. We deserve to be levelled with.

But we are not ready to relax the lockdown. If we did now we would be back to square one and have to lockdown again. That would be confusing & demoralising.

We need a viable antibody test first.

Hardly any as a % of infected population are dying below 60, certainly as we go lower. Interestingly, the most detailed mortality risk chart I've seen vs covid19 is IDENTICAL to the all causes risk of mortality by age, including the bias that more males die at all ages.

One possible conclusion is that despite the 'evidence' to the contrary, there is little or no excess mortality. Note that patients are dying with covid19, not dying from covid19. We will know if this silly suggestion is to be dismissed quite soon, via MOMO website.

A "hammer & dance" strategy which is pretty much what China are successfully doing.

That article may contain good stuff, but I'm not investing energy reading an article that is built on definitely incorrect catastrophising language. I prefer paper in peer review, even if pre-prints. I'm a retired lifelong biology researcher.

I get the impression that you want to kill 0.5 million+ people and you won't countenance any alternatives.

If you want a paper from some so called experts then read the IC report that caused the government to drop their herd immunity policy.

I have read it. Also the Oxford paper. Neither is reasonable in my view, which is good, as these do provide reasonable extreme bookends!
I don't want anyone to die. I'm long in the tooth at finding solutions to biological problems. My job for 35y. This really is a thorny one :)

An intensive care doc in NYC warns that the disease & treatment paradigm being used worldwide is incorrect & that in most cases, ventilation is inappropriate and dangerous. My timeline shows I'd this insight some time back. As a PhD, I've no credibility.

Intriguing isn't it? Also, have you yet reviewed the 24 country, weekly excess all causes mortality database, which has run for 5 years in Europe?
Oddly, the excess deaths to end March 2020 are lower than in the same time period in 2016-2019. Week14 data will upload today I hope.

Please, whatever that involves politics, don't include Sweden. Nothing is working over there. Their neighbors (Norway and Denmark) can't understand how different their approach is to everything. Sweden is a no-go when talking politics.

Almost no young people have died “with covid19” who were not either (I) already known to have a serious, underlying disorder or (ii) found after death to have such, eg an undiagnosed leukaemia, sadly not uncommon in previously health young people.

Herd immunity will happen, even if the population gets smaller along the way. Transmission isn't zero doing what we're doing now, it's just much lower. Most of the young get symptomless infection anyway. Though not in possession of acquired immunity, they're functionally immune.

Whilst I've got this little teeny bit of visibility, I'd love to know why COVID-19 was downgraded from being a HCID on 19th March and stayed there? Anyone?

> consequence infectious diseases (HCID) in the UK.
> The 4 nations public health HCID group made an interim recommendation in January 2020 to classify COVID-19 as an HCID. This was based on consideration of the UK HCID criteria about the virus and the disease with information available during the early stages of the outbreak. Now that more is known about COVID-19, the public health bodies in the UK have reviewed the most up to date information about COVID-19 against the UK HCID criteria. They have determined that several features have now changed; in particular, more information is available

Probably because the true case fatality ratio will come out very close to influenza, around 0.1%. That is, of those infected, about one in a thousand dies.

SARS was about 10%, Ebola 50%, MERS 33%. They're also very rare so treating cases in a handful of specialist centres makes sense. CV19 is maybe 1-3% though that's uncertain.

Actually, we don't have a good estimate for it's CFR yet. We know we don't know how many infected there are, and it's an unknown number above the estimates of numbers of cases. My own guesstimate is between 0.5% and 0.1%, though you could also be correct.

It's unlikely to be as low as 0.1% unless transmission is far higher than estimated and a very large number are asymptomatic.

I agree, but various lines of evidence suggests both are possible. One reason for this is that the larger the number of tests, the larger the # of positives & the lower the % fatalities. Trends, anyway. We can't really fix on any objective assessment without better data & time!

To try and ignore what's being said by folks like Darren on the basis of their accents alone is to do a massive disservice to them, to their arguments, and to their wider communities.

Cut through the prejudice. Listen. Comprehend. Don't hide behind pale excuses.

There has been an increase but by no greater extent than in several of the last few years, in at least 22 of 24 European states. The 2 which are above even the usual winter to spring increases are Italy & England (not Wales, Scot or NI). Very odd 'pandemic'.

A little OTT, IMO. I don't know the exact stats, but I think it would be fair to assume most pilots flying Spits vs the Luftwaffe were going to die.
That aside, there is great bravery facing an unquantifiable personal risk & keep going in anyway. Thank you, all.

I don't believe we are undercounting deaths. What we are doing is over-attributing them to covid19. The raw death numbers are as correct as can be & are subject to revision. They're submitted weekly to EuroMOMO, which I review weekly.

There is strangely only excess all causes mortality in England (not Scotland, Wales, NI) & Italy, when comparing year to date vs same periods in recent years. Some countries have lower mortality or no change, like Germany, Ireland & Portugal).

Typical rate of death is around 2000 per day. However, out of abundance of caution, every death is “a covid19 death” if either a PCR test is positive or symptoms were akin to those in proven covid19 illness. Which turns into a high proportion of all deaths.

953 deaths have been reported in the last 24 hours, the highest, grimmest total yet: the highest single day toll in Spain was 950, in Italy, 919. This is absolutely horrific, a national catastrophe, and yet most of the media still isn't asking the government tough questions. Why?

Owen, it isn't known why. If you think it's an obvious "gotcha", explain Sweden & Denmark. Or Spain & Portugal.

Campbell appears to believe that NZ in lockdown is a good thing. I also don't believe they've just one death. Thousands have died of normal causes. Some of them must have shown "covid19-like symptoms", as they are commonplace. Counting done differently. And little to no herd imm.

Following Exercise Cygnus, nothing was done, nothing happened. Not even an inventory of companies that can make PPE, ventilators etc.

The bottom line is that protecting the public from a pendemic was not given the same status as protecting them from a nuclear strike.

Too right. Even a pandemic isn't going to kill a fraction of one percent of the population, and most of those aren't significantly shortened. The true excess mortality isn't even going to visible in the multi year series.

If you're meaning the "herd immunity" (HE) then Ferguson "shock", I don't think it's been catastrophic. Govt / SAGE always intended a "throttled spreading" to titrate some HE without overwhelming NHS. Ferguson modulated his extreme projections.

Germany invented the test by the weekend after covid19 sequence was uploaded. Bloody good & alert scientists. Same team as jumped to it when SARS broke out. Personally I'm not convinced the test is fit for purpose, never having gone through validation.

After a short period into the Wuhan crisis, it looked like there was a world shortage of ventilators. Now we know that they should be avoided & oxygen masks used if PaO2 can't be maintained. Still need them but not for long. Long on ventilator, high 90s% death outcome.

The EU doesn't have any planes. You only need something the size of the EU bureaucracy because the EU is so large. Most states are not in a union with others, yet with exception of Germany, Europe contains the hub of the global pandemic.

You think they're avoidable? You're incorrect. You can accept that burden now, or later, but no one is getting back to normal until some herd immunity is in, or there's a vaccine (which will be years, if ever). Most viral diseases we still don't have vaccines against.

Seriously, you don't want to end up on one of those death traps. "Mobile ventilators" are the type fitted to ambulances & are fit only to prevent you dying while getting you to a proper piece of kit. Most who, with covid19, get connected to one of these don't come back.

I don't actually know in what way we frontline staff CAN "overuse" PPE anyway.

I mean - who would actually want to wear this uncomfortable suffocating, sweat producing, headache inducing ,face marking kit for fun anyway?

Sadly, there is insufficient PPE anywhere in the world to meet those, completely reasonable, requirements for kit.

Correction: several different tests including this one are in use. We don't yet know the sensitivity & specificity of all the tests. The impact of this uncertainty & indeed false neg or pos rates renders containment of the pandemic hard & leaves the case fatality rate unknown.

Not you as well Paul. Deaths are actually undercounted, as many have been dying without a test. This is trivially obvious to see when you look at all cause mortality vs seasonal average. In Bergamo this was 500% higher than seasonal average and NYC is similar.

What is your common sense view on the model's assumptions on:

- transmission rate
- symptomaticity ratio
- super-spreader events
- duration of infectiousness

Without a view on them, you can't determine if the model is reasonable

I'm curious as to your views

It seems to me we must remain alive to the possibility that (as The Economist reports here) millions have contracted the virus unknowingly, meaning the fatality rate is far lower than we imagined. And we mustn't forget that dying with the virus is not the same as dying of it.https://twitter.com/shashj/status/1248611178529443841 …

What I find stunning is that it's entirely possible that, at a European level, there will have been no excess mortality from Covid19 at all. Almost everyone I mention this too thinks I must be mad, "haven't I seen the TV?". But can you please explain this? euromomo.eu/outputs/zscore...

At the level of individual countries, theres excess mortality over normal seasonal factors, but over 24 countries tracking deaths, there doesn't appear to be anything striking, yet. If you'd not heard of Covid19 before revising the all country data, you wouldn't be surprised.

Yes it's clear that the way countries are defining & reporting deaths is different.

But my point to Paul still stands. He's quoting some modelling to make an argument. Can he critique the assumptions made in the model?

Possibly, possibly not. You don't need to be a modeller or an epidemiologist to ask good questions that deserve answers. As someone who's spent 35 years looking at data & coming up w hypotheses (new med R&D), I feel able to "look under anyone's hood", ask Qs & make observations.

But it is not like a "poor winter flu" is it? Just take a look at how it is close to overwhelming the NHS. We've not had that before. If lockdown ends then almost certainly the deaths will rise further.

You're right, clinically it differs categorically from 'flu in our perception- which might be correct - that Covid19 requires much more intervention. I think that's the heart of it. Now, I also was pretty sure the massed requirement for huge nos of ventilators was wrong.

This is a misapprehension arising from Wuhan's recommended care protocol. But patients aren't suffering ventilatory failure, instead it's a gas exchange deficit. A mask & high FIO2 is much more successful, cheaper, easier to use, far less risky & non of the iatrogenic morbidity.

Knowing what we now know, the NHS wouldn't be overwhelmed. We need to keep a much larger stock of masks, or we'll be taping together solutions a la Apollo 13!
I think we did the right thing to lockdown, as a world, but we've messed up all else from testing to supportive care.

If you knew in January what you now know, and I invite you to accept that ventilators are rarely appropriate, an oxygen mask much more successful (so we need far fewer intensive care staff), would you lock down the world? What if it's just twice as lethal as a bad flu?

Plus I'd add there is a difference between asking questions about a model & adjudicating between experts when they differ. For the latter you generally need a high degree of expertise.

I agree, but I try to avoid adjudication. Instead, where I can, I like to probe for assumptions. What have you assumed & how did you derive the values you've chosen? How sensitive is your model to changes in assumed values & other inputs. What's your confidence in outputs & why..

The coronavirus death rate is additive to/in addition to the normal annual risks, but the rates of the risks themselves are similar. A person's death from the coronavirus and their "normal" death cannot both happen at the same time.

I'm not sure that's right (not certain it isn't, either!). Doesn't the risk of dying having got covid19 pivot on your existing "all causes" risk of dying this year? Put another way, the observed mortality already nets up the vulnerability at a given age. I'm not explaining well.

How about this way of looking at it. Sounds silly, but if you die from covid19 you cannot die of something else. However, your risk of dying from Covid is primarily a result of aggregated vulnerabilities across a range of biological systems?

We don't know yet, but it's normally of the order of 2000 per day (around 600K pa). There's some seasonal variation & it's usually highest around now or a couple of months earlier. England only is showing an increase in all causes mortality over & above a normal "bad flu season".

What's fascinating is that there isn't an obvious uplift in all causes mortality - taking account of the bump ups we're for bad flu years - except for Italy, Belgium, Spain & UK (not Sco, Wal, NI). Dont know # excess deaths due covid19, but it may be near zero, in MOMO aggregate.

The lower bound on lethality is dependent upon your healthcare system coping, otherwise sky the limit. Without lockdown in the UK 500k deaths in a month or two seems very plausible. So yes I do.

I doubt all could be saved whatever care there was. And upper limit wouldn't be the sky, but a fraction of those made very ill by it (that is, while a greater fraction survive w good care, not all would die w out medical care). I take your point while being doubtful it's 0.5m.

Tragically, it's the mechanical ventilation & associated ventilator-induced lung injury which is a proximate cause of death. More would have survived if instead they'd been given a high FiO2 mask. This has been shown in SK, ITA & USA. Patients are hypoxic but can still breathe.

This means that population death rates for Covid increase exponentially with age, as a fixed proportion of overall age-specific risk. Supports idea that, for general public, Covid hugely multiplies an individual's background risk of dying over a few weeks.

David, May I ask, when using the Covid deaths per 100k pop, are you using the "deaths with covid" definition? I ask because Actuary notwithstanding, I've read reports from physicians that clearly state that, in their expert view, only around 1/6 are solely attributable to covid.

Yes, lockdown “ought” to work, but we may have under-estimated the extent to which hospitals then become the or a dominant remaining transmission route. The viral concept is alarming, though I wonder to what extent that factor is ever present yet unknown to us, for example, ‘flu?

The initial medical guidance came from Wuhan, then ex-WHO. Many people in intensive care will mostly have experienced elective care, where a patient has a long operation or trauma in otherwise reasonably healthy people, at least regarding pulmonary health.

That's prob right, I'd assume it too. If pats were wearing masks, it should be easy to contain virus in exhaled breath, by placing a suitable filter on the expiratory limb of the circuit. Aerosol maths informs us that tiny particles carry v low mass, so virus levels might be low.

If you re interested the numbers are all on the ONS website with weekly figure going back years. The recent average for Feb and March is around 11,000. 2020 was a bit lower than 2019. We await any impact from the CV19 peak in April.

Really? When we had 500 confirmed cases and Bojo came out to say we probably have 10,000? Keeping public events and schools and work open for those additional days/week after RoI and other nations - had a major impact on what we see today - and it will get much worse.

I would not have closed the schools. Kids are the future. It's unethical not to enable them to acquire immunity. We used to go this in the 60s with communicable diseases which were much more dangerous in adults than in kids. Shield the vulnerable, obv.

Herd immunity is the only route out of the virus. It absolutely astounds me how many people come onto this app spouting out that phrase when they don't have a clue what it is. It's still the only way out. For every country on planet earth. What is so difficult about this?

As a experienced life science PhD who finished career as a successful biotech CEO, I agree with you 100%.
We can brake to control speed, but eventually, herd immunity (active via disease; passive via vaccine) is non negotiable.
I doubt we'll have drug treatments. Can say why.

It's debatable what will be the excess deaths from economic shutdown. I don't know enough nor am I expert enough to even have a feel for it. Had we not locked down, it's pretty much certain we'd crush the NHS at peak (though the big + is we'd have largest herd immunity!).

No. Shutting down things earlier was the right move as it reduces the deaths attributed to health services overload and shortages like we've seen in Italy and UK. Some countries have learned from our failure, but we did not learn from other countries successes. Its a darn shame.

I have been appalled at the way 'case fatality ratios' have been computed. If it's not addressed properly, the value is a function of number of tests, who is tested & how death from covid19 is attributed. I've seen some people say it's >10% in Italy. It is not.

Yes, and O2 production can be ramped up by sacrificing other gasses in the separator. Raises costs but it can be done by running plant harder & making compromises to optimise O2 output.

Ofc the NHS has been overwhelmed. That's a fact, not a political point. And it isn't the only health service to be. Lack of ventilators, PPE, bed spaces and the ability to separate covid19 patients from others non-covid19 patients effectively proliferating the in-house infections

Almost always some parts of the NHS are fully used. This time, we moved tens of thousands of people out to create space. It was probably not without fatalities. I'm hearing no more tragedies due to slow attendance than previously, which is a surprise. They've upped ICU beds.

Why are you and people like attacking everyone pointing this out, and questioning the response? Peter had been relentlessly mocked and pilloried for it.
Its utterly disgusting. Anyone questioning the official line, which is a lie, is attacked. It's Stasi-like behaviour.

If that's true, Denmark probably has a herd immunity value of about zero. Double edged sword, in that zero population experience means, yes, no deaths but, at the same time, they've no build up of protective, transmission-breaking herd immunity, so as vulnerable 2nd time around.

They ran safety studies then into humans. I think they took less than six years from “idea to FDA approval”. It was an honour knowing the discovery biologists, medicinal chemists, Tox, clinical etc. Got such a buzz from that. This drug is a “host directed therapy”.

I think it would only be fair to represent the situation with balance. The Polish pilots were ex their Air Force. After a while, most new pilots from U.K. were newbies. So your statement is true, as the Poles had not yet been killed in combat.

His idea was to shield the old and vulnerable, we now know that the virus can kill anyone.
Herd immunity without a vaccine, or treatment is misguided and wrong.

That's right Bob. However, if you look at the science, it indicates that, without a vaccine & any effective treatment, herd immunity would only be achieved after 12 cycles of the disease in the UK. That's 60% immunity after 12 cycles of 60,000 deaths-500,000 dead.

Eventually we will have a vaccine and drugs to counteract the symptoms. At the present time the concept of herd immunity is dangerous. Too many would die. It may well happen naturally in the future, but for now other measures should be considered.

We have a head start because vaccines for SARS related viruses have already been developed.
The opinion seems to be that within twelve months we will have one.
Until then damage limitation is preferable to herd immunity.

I heard that then it was dismissed because we need a covid19 specific vaccine. I too am optimistic but it cannot be fast. Consider this might be given to more people than any synthetic material in history. A rushed vaccine isn't wise. My guess is 2years to date of vaccination.

You may well be right, my optimism comes from the fact that the majority of countries are working together on this, its in everyone's interest (even Trump 👁)
The combined knowledge should make the results more effective, and quickly identify any problems.

An actuary should be retained to estimate the expected number of deaths, with that size workforce, over the relevant period. I know the staff are not representative of the whole pop, but if they were, around 1% per year, or 600 deaths, might be expected, without the virus.

Yes, I agree that long term it will be the game changer, but the impact now without a vaccine or treatment, the results would be devastating.
It's a question of finding the right time to take the necessary steps.
From what we now know, this is not the right time.

Proper ventilators are more complex than you would believe. Lungs are, too. What they are not are balloons you pump up & down. The most likely outcome of putting someone in a low spec ventilator is lung injury & death. They've very little role in covid19 patients treatment.

Crowd-pleasing but wrong, data below.

We spend a relatively low %GDP on health vs developed nations. To match Germany you'd need to increase funding from c.£140bn to about £180bn overnight. The NHS only just keeps up due to scale efficiencies.

PCR is such a poor test that evidence obtained using it for forensic purposes is well known to be vulnerable. And that's using labs who understand it's weaknesses & are painstaking in the care put into running the tests. The way it's being done en masse gives a high error rate.

Excuse me, but I bloody well hope this scenario never happens. Appalling.

Thinking back to my boring pharmaceutical background, testing existing drugs may be a way forward. Beta blockers, muscle relaxing drugs, and statins have various uses. Still hoping

Israelis are Arabs and Jews. The "chosen ones" is a biblical term which most don't believe. If you're referring to Jews, say so. BTW have you ever spoken to an Israeli Jew and asked him anything? Fancy, coming on a thread condemning racism and being a racist.

They all seem to jump on the same passing bandwagon. How about investigating why they can't produce the figures daily, then criticise if appropriate. It would certainly be more productive from the viewers point of view.

We already know why it can't be done daily. A death certificate is required. If the deceased was in a care home, it's possible they've not been seen recently by a doctor and a decision is needed on cause of death. The doctor might need to speak to staff, possibly even visit.

Sometimes a few days pass before a death certificate can be filed with the registrar. From there, someone has to pull & collate records. There are thousands of homes & while getting the paperwork done is important, it doesn't trump the priority for continuing care for residents.

you dont have to fear to avoid risk, neither do you have to "go on like this forever"

Its a virus you have no immunity to and can get others sick (or they get you sick) for weeks before anyone even realizes they have it.

so either mitigate or isolate until we have a vaccine.

It is reasonable to conclude that there is a strong correlation between later countries' death rates per million and the leadership style and ability in place in each country. US, UK, Turkey and Brazil stand out to me as inept leadership responses which have added to the rate.

It's any excuse to bring more in.
We are a small country with finite resources.
We can't keep up with an infinite amount of people relocating here.
It's basic maths.

I agree, but 80,000 is far short of infinite. Without them, we cannot run farming as an industry. Importantly, these workers are on temporary visas. They're not like university students that are supposed to go home at the end, but sometimes don't.

What's local substitution? Tim Martini explained it differently. RM was bigging up savings on food by imports from all over the world. The EU was described as a protectionist club for protecting EU farmers. Now it's only local substitution.

There is a massively increased death toll in Italy compared to that which would be expected based no counterfactual data of previous years. So If it's not CV19 all these countries must be having a truly terrible year..

I don't think it adds anything useful to try to bend an already imperfect system in order to add flawed data to the daily total. I believe what is needed most is a continual feed from a large, unimpeachable source, to guide decision makers. For me, that's hospital deaths.

That said, I want all the deaths, regardless of cause, to finish up in the public record, while avoiding risk of double counting or excessive error rates. At present, they do. Do you know what other countries do? I've not looked, so it would be helpful to know.

Readers! Are climate dissidents, @ClimateDepot @thegwpfcom and many others next? Not only detained but also FORCIBLY HAULED AND CONFINED TO A PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL! Never imagined this could have gotten this far. Reported in @welt as well: ukcolumn.org/article/corona...

by Alex Thomson: Lateral Approaches

Tuesday, 14th April 2020

A large number of well-established doctors and lawyers in the German-speaking countries have questioned the constitutionality of their governments' stringent confinement measures, which are commonly being referred to by the English loan-word der Shutdown (as there is no precedent for what to call the situation in German). These measures have begun to be challenged openly on the streets of Berlin. The medical and legal dissidents number in the dozens. None, however, has paid such a price for that freedom of speech as the German medical lawyer Beate Bahner, who has been committed to a psychiatric institution for publicly disagreeing with the measures and policies followed by the German government.

Yes, it does. Weekly data is lumpy. Do you not find it more than odd that YTD all causes mortality is almost exactly the same as the 5y average for the same period?
Overall, if you hadn't heard of covid19, you wouldn't be looking for an explanation, based on these numbers.

Before a vaccine, one challenge will be people who have recovered going out to soon (because they have bills to pay, or other needs) and they're used to common flu behavior..

you will have antibodies, but you will also be still shedding the virus, which CAN still infect people.

I can't tell you that that information is incorrect but unless you've seen current research (which I do most days) I don't think you should state it as fact. I believe if people follow the self isolation guidance, that should be a rare event if at all. I've seen a small...

I'm in the same place. Our house opens directly onto a narrow residential street. Once my trusty pressure washer fires up, no one comes closer than 4 metres, not unless they don't might getting gritty moss fragments all over them. Happy days?

Maybe because it's on TV 24/7 we're all in lockdown, so many theories going around, the media trying to scare the shit out of everyone and in reality the weekly death count is similar to other years. Eddie large died of covid 19 last week, his family stated he had heart failure

Sitting outside in Budapest spring weather. Unlike UK, Hungary allows going out for leisure as well as exercise, if social distancing observed. Hungary's mortality rate (8%) much lower than UK + 3rd best in EU on DKG Covid-19 safety ranking (earlier tweet) abouthungary.hu/news-in-brief/...

Are you saying that 8% of confirmed covid19 cases die?
As has been pointed out, you could get any value from 0% (no tests) to 100% (only test the dead & dying).
That said, for reasons we'd dearly like to understand, Hungary seems to be weathering Covid19 well. Keep well!

They could come in daily, rather than weekly, but would not be bang up to date. Government and medics would welcome this for logistics, trends and moves forward. I'm confident they are currently doing the best job possible under the circumstances. Retribution will come later.

I would add them weekly. Otherwise the data will be very "spikey". Adding daily from a sporadic feed will make it much harder to look for trends.

They all seem to jump on the same passing bandwagon. How about investigating why they can't produce the figures daily, then criticise if appropriate. It would certainly be more productive from the viewers point of view.

It's been explained that deaths outside hospitals are collated up to a week later. Death certificates are the source for ONS to produce bulletins & this is the first occasion when anyone can report out.
There is no system which could report ex-hospital deaths daily.

There have been 11,329 coronavirus deaths in the UK. Where are the bodies, where is the footage of funeral corteges etc?

Nothing to do with these conspiracy theories. It is just surprising that the media isn't using this type of footage to denigrate the government's efforts further.

I'm thinking about it. Perhaps the media realised that each funeral looks like any other, there aren't obviously more. Reason is a very large no of people die yearly anyway, ~600K. In that light, while 10K seems awful, when all the stats are in, it may have been a nothing burger.

Um, no. In the 2018/19 flu season there were 312 deaths attributed to flu between week 40 2018 and week 15 2019. So CV19 is a tad worse

You might want to check your data again and look in the 65+ age range, the age most impacted by Flu and CV19. There is a massive difference in mortality there.

I agree. When I was fired for the second time, aged 50, I decided to try consulting to Pharma & biotech. Overheads were very low, a laptop & a phone. If I travelled it was always covered by clients. The worst that could happen was not making much, but I couldn't lose £.

We already know why it can't be done daily. A death certificate is required. If the deceased was in a care home, it's possible they've not been seen recently by a doctor and a decision is needed on cause of death. The doctor might need to speak to staff, possibly even visit.

Sometimes a few days pass before a death certificate can be filed with the registrar. From there, someone has to pull & collate records. There are thousands of homes & while getting the paperwork done is important, it doesn't trump the priority for continuing care for residents.

I don't think it adds anything useful to try to bend an already imperfect system in order to add flawed data to the daily total. I believe what is needed most is a continual feed from a large, unimpeachable source, to guide decision makers. For me, that's hospital deaths.

I suspected a 2weeks ago that it's become clear to seniors in Govt that they've goofed very badly. Covid19 is not particularly virulent or deadly. So it suits them to make the data look like covid19 is nastier than it is, to avoid riots when we learn lockdown was superfluous.

If that's a serious question, the NHS isn't a research lab. Setting up a test of this kind is, in principle, not difficult. The crucial, novel component is viral antigen. Post-infection serum could contain antibodies which bind to that antigen. Then we can use catalogue reagents,

What do you think of the temperature screening at schools or workplace? With 40-50% being presymptomatic, is it even serving the purpose of "screening"? Would it be better to keep it shut down?

Closing the borders will save lives and prevent the NHS from being overwhelmed by Health Tourists.

Indeed, it's because there are many (perhaps over 100) varieties of virus in circulation that flight bans wouldn't help, certainly now. I also wondered why we didn't ban flights in Jan. I recall WHO saying it wouldn't help, though they didn't explain, and felt counterintuitive.

What's your point, Andrew?

Today is the 17th. You know perfectly well the CEO of Glaxo said this week that they would be bringing on 30,000 capacity next week (in one go). That alone would make it over halfway to being achieved.

A better question is why capacity is under-used?

Yes, that could be done. It would require a process change, in that at present the registrar is the sole holder of authentic records, so it would be a daily job for someone there to send the results to whoever compiles the SAGE numbers. The risk of double counting would increase.

I'm surprised at how few people burrow into data to see if they agree with what we're told or led to believe. It's certain that covid19 as cause of death is greatly overstated. Why?

Yup, Italy but the same holds true for England/Wales. It's hard to tell on the graphs. But the Z would maybe be at around 12/13 compared to approx 8 for the highest previous peak.

Ben McMelvin @TheMelv78 · 14h
I would also argue that CV19is understated. The ONS data and the Italian report shows that there is a significant increase in mortality over and above the reported CV19 figures. So either a) impact of CV19 is greater or b) something else significant is going on

The doctor is not required to see the deceased & May issue a death certificate. Covid19 is new. It would not be surprising if the doctor had no personal experience of the various symptoms of covid19. It's hard to see how commonly they would put covid19 on the certificate. Tricky.

That's certainly true near me, in rural East Kent. When younger, both my kids applied for summer farm work. Birth were told "we don't hire locals for unskilled farm work". They only hire foreigners & require them to live on site, the charge for which comes out of their wages.

Once this report was broadcast, I decided I was going to boycott any Mansfield Farms produce & I have done so for around 5 years. Shame, as I love several varieties of apple.

They told us the only reason for the lockdown was to "flatten the (hospital admissions) curve" to prevent overwhelming NHS ICU capacity. We've all but achieved that but, they've now moved the goalposts.

Incorrect. Because they also said they needed to remove the threat of the virus returning. Again, they were very clear up front.

Eventually we will have a vaccine and drugs to counteract the symptoms. At the present time the concept of herd immunity is dangerous. Too many would die. It may well happen naturally in the future, but for now other measures should be considered.

Unlikely we'll get a vaccine ready to be injected in thee & me before 2022. As to level of danger, we don't know enough to say that. Equally I'm not saying it is not. Drugs, we might get lucky, but 35 years in new meds R&D indicates to me it's a long shot. Herd immunity awaits.

If that's a serious question, the NHS isn't a research lab. Setting up a test of this kind is, in principle, not difficult. The crucial, novel component is viral antigen. Post-infection serum could contain antibodies which bind to that antigen. Then we can use catalogue reagents,

Ah the virtues of a nationalised health service.

Germany meanwhile are whipping through tests, thanks to all the private laboratories they have that can do the tests.

More also needs to be made of China bulk buying the chemicals needed for testing at the end of last year.

Conclusion to draw from that is they are on a path to impending doom? They had not locked down, their death rate is already one of the highest, and they are not even overwhelmed yet? Surely you can see where I'm going with that. Doesn't spell 'in a good position' to me.

Are we discussing SWE? Peak of pandemic is in. Provided the daily # of deaths don't rebound, they need just to manage till it stops. So far, YTD all causes mortality per EuroMOMO is lower than most recent years. I look forward to seeing if % immune is different from other states.

Where do you get this information that they have peaked when their outbreak is one of the most recent to have developed? They are several weeks behind us and even we haven't peaked yet. Their cases will continue to grow exponentially because of their lack of restrictions

Agree testing should bemuch more widespread, because it serves at least two purposes. I'm most interested in the second one, which is to get a better estimate of relatively, how dangerous is Covid19? Case fatality ratio isn't helpful if we ignore infected, low symptom cases.

As it turned out, the projected need for large numbers of ventilators was incorrect. Based on early Wuhan treatment protocols, patients were aggressively moved to ventilation. As they didn't have obstruction or respiratory failure, all they needed was a mask & high O2.

Where was the NHS in all this? Surely it was the job of the NHS to tell ministers exactly what sort of ventilators it required -- and the best way of getting them (which must surely have been building under licence rather than reinventing the wheel)?

As it turned out, the projected need for large numbers of ventilators was incorrect. Based on early Wuhan treatment protocols, patients were aggressively moved to ventilation. As they didn't have obstruction or respiratory failure, all they needed was a mask & high O2.

Ventilation probably killed hundreds through ventilator induced lung injury. Worse, basic ventilators are NEVER suitable for more than a few hours. These Herd immunity didn't stop SARS. No country got anywhere near herd immunity numbers. SARS was contained by case detection, isolation, quarantine, and contact tracing. The chain of transmission a broke and it disappeared because so few people actually caught it.

Interesting. Noteworthy that there is no vaccine for SARS, years on. I've read that finding cases & tracking contacts can work very well as in the occasion you cite. But I've also read that this fails once you've more than a few hundred cases. We're probably at hundreds of 1000s.

We can only hope SARS vaccine wasn't found because there were too few cases. A vaccine that's not required to be mass-produced = no money to be made.

Yes, it's also interesting that eventually the virus got weaker, as it did with the 1918 Spanish flu.
But only after a couple of big hits.
It's hoped we know more and technology is advanced enough to stop or control

Usually ten years. In this case we're told 18months. Personally I don't want a rush job vaccine being given to more people on Earth than anything synthetic has ever been. It should be noted it's not guaranteed we'll ever have a vaccine. That's my base case.

I agree even asymptomatic cases need to be logged however I think that with the daily deaths we can clearly see it's definitely a high fatality rate, there are not this many deaths per day country to country due to flu but further testing for a more accurate rate is a must

That's fair. It's certainly true that the daily death totals in some counties are higher than usual. In many others, there really aren't. This suggests that the overall effect isn't gross. A good source is EuroMOMO, which in turn draws in each country's equivalent to our ONS.

I agree but the countries with high cases and low mortality it's due to the mass testing tracing isolation policies they implemented from the get go, i.e Germany, South Korea etc! I'll be sure to check those thanks

With the exception of tiny & well organised Iceland, no country has tested enough of its population to make the slightest difference to anything. They might as well have not bothered, or better, used the capacity to obtain a representative sample.

Where did you see that the ventilators might be harmful? Be interesting to read it! Definitely high death rates per confirmed cases occur when the health system is overloaded but that's what makes the virus deadly is if left unchecked it'll sweep through populations resulting

It's not new or controversial. If you search "ventilator induced lung injury", that's key. Low spec machines intended for ambulances & transport will kill anyone left in them for days. Also, the diaphragm rapidly atrophied. Finally, ventilator associated pneumonia kills many.

If I've understood you, Iceland has low % infected? They might be better off seeking to exclude the virus & hope for a vaccine.
New data from a random sample Massachusetts showed fully one third of the population has had the virus. I'd like confirmation. If so, we're nearly home.

Yeah that's right. Looks to have went up a good bit but assume that's down to them testing serious cases only like everyone after initial random tests. 1760 cases/9 dead/pop 364k. They've maybe got a chance of containing it cos sparsely populated as well as low population.

"The majority of their customers are at no risk whatsoever from the virus. It's insane.",

So, how many deaths is ok by you?
Which old relatives are you willing to sacrifice?

Because YOU wont be taking the risk will you...thats just the "little peoples" problem.

If the personal risk of a fit 40year old is lower than that of a moderately well 75year old with diabetes, and you were happy to treat grandma to coffee last year, there is no reason to steer clear of a cafe. We have a poor grasp of relative risks.

My point is not everyone is taking the same risk.

V. Cheianov, Esq. @cheianov · Apr 22

I don't do straw men. I just show that this specific argument by Prof. Heneghan is a mathematical fallacy.

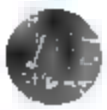
Thanks for the reference, I will have a look

LOCKDOWN

He also praised Sweden for "holding its nerve" by not enforcing a lockdown.

Professor Heneghan, who also works as a GP, told MailOnline: "The peak of deaths occurred on April 8, and if you understand that then you work backwards to find the peak of infections.

"That would be 21 days before then, right before the point of lockdown."



Twenty one days is the average time it takes for a person to fall seriously ill and die after contracting Covid-19.

He claims if deaths peaked on April 8, infections were at the highest three weeks earlier.

New data shows the rate of Brits with upper respiratory tract infections dropped from 20 per 100,000 on March 15 to just 12 six days later.

The numbers do not specifically relate to coronavirus but they provide a good insight as so few people were being tested for the deadly bug.

This government is guilty of the culpable homicide of huge numbers of its citizens. Whatever bubble you live in, I'm afraid you are not looking at the situation with any kind of critical awareness of the real toil of ideological austerity on many, many vulnerable people.

Late lockdown, blocking PPE for spurious reasons, austerity cuts to the NHS over many years, universal credit sanctions against vulnerable people. All while they make a profit from arms sales to destroy other nations. They are responsible for many, many deaths

Nothing will happen re covid19 when we lift the lockdown, because we are close to herd immunity already. There are now a growing handful of scientific papers to this effect in Denmark, SWE & USA. It's all but over.

The tragic point also is that, although this paper only appeared early April, a "pre-print" was probably available to U.K. Govt before they seriously messed up & went for lockdowns incl schools. Did you know there's no evidence 'lockdown' as effective in cutting transmission?

It's uncertain whether death certificates correctly categorise cause of death.
What I urge you to do is review closely the "All-causes Mortality" data. Unless you think Govt is hiding dead bodies, that data is correct. It shows a modest 4% more deaths than usual. Just noise, IMO.

Perceptive point! to be clear: I'm as certain as I can be that it DOES happen.
However, no one has conducted the tests of Koch's postulates, which includes being able to isolate it from a case; and then isolate again, from a person they allegedly infected, who became ill.

I think this is because people seem to regard it as certain anyway, so it's not evaluated. A circular argument & seriously bad science. If someone can link a WHO source to proof, I'd be grateful. It's a WHO responsibility.

I agree that you can fail to save seriously ill patients if healthcare is overwhelmed. Wuhan initially & Italy for weeks, that happened. In Italy, deaths were large additionally because frail people were literally abandoned by frightened carers. In both, many were ventilated..

I don't have the energy to review red top reporting. If there is ONS data, coroner's statements, and the like, we won't need to speculate. It's certainly possible that a child dies & is found to be covid19 positive but that doesn't mean covid19 killed them.

Whatever the answer is, I hope it appears relatively soon, Yardley.
I have a feeling we're all going to need considerable patience, easing off in small steps.

Numerically, you have only one choice to avoid a huge death toll: suppress the epidemic. It may be possible, but some care is required.

Shielding (or "cocooning") by forcing agency care home workers without PPE on zero hour contracts to carry virus from home to home won't work.

Broadly agree. A key piece of data is infection fatality rate. Early estimates are always much higher than the real figure, especially if a high % are asymptomatic. Better estimates are emerging based on antibody prevalence, and are converging on the same value as seasonal 'flu.

For example, we believe respiratory route is a key route to get infected. In fact, except in unusual circs, like in medical emergency, getting the virus via your lungs is a minor route (WHO) if at all. Donors droplets ARE the key source: infection is mostly manual/ocular/oral.

It was asserted early in that tens of thousands of ventilators were needed. They are not. Covid19 does not cause airway obstruction nor respiratory failure. Ventilation in the frail & ill can often kill in its own right through ventilator induced lung injury / barotrauma,

Thus, while you'd think we can competently count corpses, we won't even be able to compare respiratory infection deaths 2020 with prior years. The only thing we can rely on is total, all causes mortality. Most countries are still close to normal for week 15. Most odd.

The tragic point also is that, although this paper only appeared early April, a "pre-print" was probably available to U.K. Govt before they seriously messed up & went for lockdowns incl schools. Did you know there's no evidence 'lockdown' as effective in cutting transmission?

Evidence is children aren't vectors in transmission of covid19. It cannot be said for certain, but there have been tracked cases of virus positive children interacting with hundreds of adults without transmission. I share this point well aware that with flu, kids are key vectors.

That is something that's bugs me about the way the data has been conveyed; we see this steep ascent of cases and it's looks really bad, but it's because the initial spread of a new virus. If you put the numbers in context and in terms of it plateauing, it's less frightening.

Yes, I agree. Usually these plots use a log Y axis for that reason. To be fair, there are plenty in this format.
Another dissonant feature is many people don't know that around 600,000 people die every year in UK, so when we see "800 deaths today" we don't know that's a fraction.

If it's life or death, you'd get there. Mostly, it isn't. If you're concerned you're very ill, you won't be at work, whatever is wrong with you. Only if you're forced to self isolate but are completely well, then a negative test is liberating. All others, it doesn't alter much.

Several thousand is an estimate I've heard, based on 90 non covid19 excess deaths per day in London alone. Soon, NOT lifting lockdown will demonstrably be a greater ill than leaving it in place.

Nothing will happen re covid19 when we lift the lockdown, because we are close to herd immunity already. There are now a growing handful of scientific papers to this effect in Denmark, SWE & USA. It's all but over.

If he claims it is lockdown which is saving us from 250k deaths, how does he account for SWE's low deaths without lockdown (which shows lockdown is rather ineffective)? Also, every piece of new data points to ever lower IFRs. This is not a remarkably lethal virus.

You might be one of the lucky ones.
I also got Swine flu - best rest I ever had:)
Never needed to leave home with either.
But this virus is unique + unpleasant - chills + clamped ribcage for days on end.
I had almost no cough, temp up only for minutes, sense of smell gone a day.

It's because we parents are in lockdown and self-isolating. If my disabled 12 year old caught Covid19, he would likely die from it due to his disability. The fact that my son is alive, isn't proof that Covid19 isn't dangerous for under 14s but rather that isolation works

It's a good point. There's no early winter peak for flu deaths. What we've probably got is a delayed excess winter deaths peak, due to a different respiratory virus, of similar lethality. Quite likely mostly the same people who'd have died Nov-Feb, instead died Feb-May.

What about them? They too belong to the age & wellness range and most who have died due to covid19 rather than incidentally with it are at the older and/or less well end. Any impressions we're given that fit, young people are dying in numbers is a deceit.

Wake up Britain, Kuentssberg, Peston etc are all wide of the mark on this one, trying desperately to undermine Boris & Government and stop Brexit.
Question Italy, Netherlands, Spain about this EU PPE scheme and if they benefitted?
Might get the wrong answer!

> THE ENQUIRER @_TheEnquirer
> The BBC and other political media are out to discredit the Government over procurement of personal protection equipment. They have latched onto a fake EU scheme that has produced no PPE supplies so far. The BBC claims UK should join this useless EU front organisation.

Not only that, but the EU Procurement Scheme failed to deliver ventilators at speed. It's a red herring anyway, since ventilators are rarely of use in severe cases since respiratory failure isn't a feature of the disease. We never ran out & we were never likely to. Smear job.

Perceptive point! to be clear: I'm as certain as I can be that it DOES happen. However, no one has conducted the tests of Koch's postulates, which includes being able to isolate it from a case; and then isolate again, from a person they allegedly infected, who became ill.

It's a virus. It has some unusual features, the main helpful one being it does not attack & kill youngsters, unlike influenza, which year kills tens of thousands, mostly old & already ill, but occasionally the totally unexpected infant or child.

Is it your belief that, almost uniquely, this virus does not induce immunity? It's a high probability that it does. We know that CV19 induces antibodies & immunity in monkeys. We know it induces antibodies in humans. The dots are joined, unless you've reason not to?

No, some research has been made into whether you produce enough or any and they said it might be 30% that dont. Plus cases of already infected being reinfected. Or it could be the tests aren't sensitive enough to measure really small amount of the virus.

Nope. There is no issue at all with specificity; if the swab says you have it, you have it. The problem is with sensitivity: if the swab says you don't have it, you might still have it.

Try asking more pertinent questions, like inviting them to comment on the implications of early antibody testing in Swe, Den, NYC, Boston & California? Spoiler: they all suggest transmission of the virus has been very greater than imperial claims. That data says lethality = flu.

The whole tracking has been a mess from the day this rotten test was foisted on a desperate world. It's not useless if used with great care but as with all massively amplified tests, it's easy to get false positives. Using the test wrongly can obviously get false negatives.

It's never been clinically validated, that is, shown only to be positive when virus can be cultured and negative when it can't. That work, always required of such an assay, has not been done. No one can point to validation as to what it's really measuring.

Next, no one has gone out & conducted random tests on a large group & tested the same people on a weekly basis as the pandemic progressed. So we don't have any idea what % of population have been infected. If 2% we are in serious trouble. If 33% we have locked down needlessly.

Yes. I'm perhaps one of the people qualified to review the data. Did you know, for example, that not a single infant has died of covid19?
Flu & other winter respiratory viruses kill up to a hundred infants yearly in U.K.?
Each a tragedy. It's good that covid19 doesn't do this.

Covid-19: help us investigate

The Guardian is investigating how the UK government prepared for – and is responding to – the coronavirus pandemic. We want to learn more about recent decisions taken at the heart of government. If you're a whistleblower or source and with new information, you can email covid19.investigations@theguardian.com, or (using a non-work phone) use Signal or WhatsApp to message (UK) +44 7584 640566. (The number does not take calls.) For the most secure communications, use SecureDrop. For general advice on confidentially contacting the Guardian, see our guide.

Guardian is about to walk into a low beam, because the pandemic is already ending, whether we lift lockdown or not. By the time they've got their killer article ready, no one will be interested in their wittering. On the downside, they'll ramp up their anti-Brexit bleating again.

It is. Peak deaths was 11 days ago, therefore the peak in infections was just before lockdown. The crisis will now gradually subside, whether lockdown is lifted or not. I agree there is the last horrible wave running through the pop but sizeable new infections are done. Thanks.

I don't think so. It's not my calculation, anyway. I'll see if I can find the source. It's fundamentally correct, plus or minus a day or two. Of that, I'm almost certain. I'm a recently retired 35 year veteran of biomedical a R&D.

Perceptive point! to be clear: I'm as certain as I can be that it DOES happen. However, no one has conducted the tests of Koch's postulates, which includes being able to isolate it from a case; and then isolate again, from a person they allegedly infected, who became ill.

I think this is because people seem to regard it as certain anyway, so it's not evaluated. A circular argument & seriously bad science. If someone can link a WHO source to proof, I'd be grateful. It's a WHO responsibility.

Lastly, they can do this because if the government said tonight theres a lock down, they'd all immediately do it. There's no risk that if numbers sky rocket that they wouldn't be able you mitigate. Other countries are more difficult.

Although their death rate is clearly higher than their neighbours, I don't know if it would look so large a difference if plotted per million of population. Also, we need to see turning points: % positive / # tests; cases; # hospitalised; # daily Covid19 deaths. Anyone have that?

Now pls plot it with log Y axis & add comparable counties not neighbours. Belgium might be instructive. Plots per million of population is a helpful view. Sweden has a midpack death rate, showing that lockdown is at best a minor barrier to transmission (it's not evidence based).

Possibly, but not verified. Having a positive then negative then positive test again is not "getting reinfected". Most likely, they were always positive. Or the first or last was a false positive. Both are known weaknesses with amplified PCR tests.
Even if true, it'll be rare.

In brief, several research groups have begun to assess the % of their population with anti-Covid19 antibodies in their blood. The results indicate that herd immunity is widely in place, the pandemic is self limiting & the infection fatality rate is approx that of seasonal 'flu.

This was obvious from the earliest times. The case fatality rate on the Diamond Princess liner was 1%, in a population that we now classify as vulnerable. Scaling to a population with all-age demographics, immediately the infection fatality rate falls to seasonal 'flu. It's over.

It's never been clinically validated, that is, shown only to be positive when virus can be cultured and negative when it can't. That work, always required of such an assay, has not been done. No one can point to validation as to what it's really measuring.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 20
Next, no one has gone out & conducted random tests on a large group & tested the same people on a weekly basis as the pandemic progressed. So we don't have any idea what % of population have been infected. If 2% we are in serious trouble. If 33% we have locked down needlessly.

Thus, while you'd think we can competently count corpses, we won't even be able to compare respiratory infection deaths 2020 with prior years. The only thing we can rely on is total, all causes mortality. Most countries are still close to normal for week 15. Most odd.

Seasonal flu went away with social distancing

> The ONS shows 9000 excess deaths over the five year average, year to the same date. Sounds dramatic until you consider that the baseline is over 150,000 deaths year to date. The excess is around 4%, in what is usually quite 'noisy' data. That's far less than seasonal flu.

I hadn't thought of that. Interesting! Not convinced because the timing wouldn't fit well. I recall peak flu would be Dec-Feb? Also, children are a key component of flu transmission & closing schools would amplify this part. I had thought we'd simply been lucky with 'flu 2019-20.

They're doing well. Their deaths peaked days back & are now falling back speedily. Their peak infections would have been 3-4 weeks earlier than that. Their timecourse (shape of cases & deaths vs time) is superimposable on ours, suggesting lockdown was not effective. We'll see.

The ONS shows 9000 excess deaths over the five year average, year to the same date. Sounds dramatic until you consider that the baseline is over 150,000 deaths year to date. The excess is around 4%, in what is usually quite 'noisy' data. That's far less than seasonal flu.

Enzyme linked immunosorbent assays rely on a virus sticking to a plastic tube & your antibodies against it binding to that. You use another antibody to detect your Ab, then a colour producing enzyme gives the readout, easily read on a simple instrument.

These too can be error prone. If the choice of 'viral epitope' is poor, it might fail to see your Abs, or might see irrelevant Ab binding. Usually these issues can be ironed out & tests of this design are probably those being used for small scale serology surveys. Good enough.

Noo. I think that means no one under that age died of covid19.
All deaths are recorded, no exceptions.
This way of recording is unique: we have never before listed the infection as the cause of death. Even with 'flu, we write pneumonia or heart attack, with flu as contributor.

Early lockdown would make now wk 6, with 2more before we get extended again. It's not tolerable & I'm a compliant person. Govt knew that very extended lockdown will itself lead to avoidable Illness & death. 100 a day non covid19 excess deaths in London alone. Govt made good call.

Well done. That's what the government is telling us. You've been paying attention to the daily briefings. What are the 100 excess deaths? Are they related to the lockdown or are they because of the levels of covid infection and the strain this is putting on the nhs?

Next, no one has gone out & conducted random tests on a large group & tested the same people on a weekly basis as the pandemic progressed. So we don't have any idea what % of population have been infected. If 2% we are in serious trouble. If 33% we have locked down needlessly.

Enzyme linked immunosorbent assays rely on a virus sticking to a plastic tube & your antibodies against it binding to that. You use another antibody to detect your Ab, then a colour producing enzyme gives the readout, easily read on a simple instrument.

These too can be error prone. If the choice of 'viral epitope' is poor, it might fail to see your Abs, or might see irrelevant Ab binding. Usually these issues can be ironed out & tests of this design are probably those being used for small scale serology surveys. Good enough.

For example, we believe respiratory route is a key route to get infected. In fact, except in unusual circs, like in medical emergency, getting the virus via your lungs is a minor route (WHO) if at all. Donors droplets ARE the key source: infection is mostly manual/ocular/oral.

That is something that's bugs me about the way the data has been conveyed; we see this steep ascent of cases and it's looks really bad, but it's because the initial spread of a new virus. If you put the numbers in context and in terms of it plateauing, it's less frightening.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 20

Yes, I agree. Usually these plots use a log Y axis for that reason. To be fair, there are plenty in this format.
Another dissonant feature is many people don't know that around 600,000 people die every year in UK, so when we see "800 deaths today" we don't know that's a fraction.

Also there are 8 different strains and each country has only part of the strains in dominance. Either way, the whole world will experience another wave if they can only get immunity to certain strains and the international travel restarts. I think.

Yes, it's definitely incorrect to state that kids can't catch it. They can. They don't die of it. Whether they can infect others is uncertain. Much less than adults do, anyway.

Even if you were right - and you're not, btw - those healthy under 60s interacting normally would rapidly spread the virus to one another & from there to those who are unhealthy and/or over 60, who would then overwhelm medical services & die in huge numbers.

What, like in Sweden? Did you know that neither “social distancing” nor “lockdown” has any empirical science to support it? Hand washing does, however. The shape of deaths timecourse in various countries being v similar suggests these measures are rather ineffective.

Tarring his as our media did was a gross injustice, his language was not uncommon in its day. His logic was impeccable. The “rivers of blood” remark was a Virgil quote.

PCR is the basis of the “test for virus”. It’s not a good test, but it’s what we’ve got. It amplifies bits of viral RNA using designed ‘primers’ which fit the bits. The test cycles dozens of times, doubling each time. It’s error prone to false negs and false positive.

Were you crying about the 20,000 to 50,000 who die annually if flu, even after vaccination? This includes more than a few kids, though most victims are elderly or already ill.
If you didn't, do you feel any cognitive dissonance? You should. You'll get there eventually.

The reason is Brits can't get to the farms for 6am starts. British public transport isn't good enough. Foreign workers are prepared to live on site in bunks. Foreign Labour isn't cheaper. That's just a lie you've chosen to believe to suit your xenophobia.

You live next to farms, do you? I do. They won't hire Brits because they won't live on site in crappy caravans whereas most migrant labour does. They're charged for it & deducted from wages. Net pay is well under NMW. Legal, but bent. All local applicants rejected out of hand.

They should not have closed primary schools, though it's easy to be wise after the event. Closures damages their education, puts essential working families in difficulty, saved no one & took from them the chance to develop immunity (to the extent this happens). See Sweden.

Me too. I read that speech. There are a few sentences that make us wince now, it's true, but that language was moderate at the time. The parliamentary candidate for Wolverhampton at that time had on a leaflet "if you want a n for a neighbour, vote Labour". I kid you not.

I think that's axiomatic at this stage. I hope, though, you're not using that normal state of affairs this early in a new infectious organism, to imply the contrary: that there is reason to suspect that immunity will not be conferred by prior exposure to this foreign material?

many people have become re infected

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 20
Possibly, but not verified. Having a positive then negative then positive test again is not "getting reinfected". Most likely, they were always positive. Or the first or last was a false positive. Both are known weaknesses with amplified PCR tests.
Even if true, it'll be rare.

The sensitivity of Covid19 swabs is awful, like 60% awful. That means more than 1 in 3 people who have Covid19 will test negative. If she symptomatically presented as Covid19 and had a negative flu swab (and she will have had a flu swab), then she had Covid19.

The tests can as easily read false positive. It's inherent in the huge amplification used in PCR.
Also, there are many viruses beyond "flu" & covid19 capable of inducing similar symptoms. We have never, until now, attributed death to a named respiratory virus. Too error prone.

Given that lockdown has been so well followed, where are the bulk of new infections coming from? Would it be plausible to suppose they may mainly now be a result of transmission within the same households?

We in UK need surveys of seropositivity at speed, using existing manual assays. These have existed for weeks, using methods in use for decades. We will find the same. The pandemic is all but over, lockdown was not the cause of termination but widespread infection & herd immunity.

Emerging seropositivity data from multi countries tells us the IFR of covid19 is similar to a bad 'flu, and kills the same people (except covid19 spares kids, possibly due to low virus target expression (ACE2). You're right about developing herd immunity: SWE is well on its way.

Our typical excess deaths due to a seasonal respiratory virus, usually influenza, this time a coronavirus, are greater than the deaths borne to date. By year end, covid19 may not even make a blip in the all causes mortality total which will be close to 600,000.

This is hardly ever mentioned yet the lost lives are in the main in younger people who are perishing with covid19. All lost lives are regrettable but ignoring a group is unjust.

We know how to assemble sequences of DNA / RNA, but the lab methods we have to use leave “tell marks” in the sequence, where the lab tools bind to complementary sequence. These are all absent from covid19 sequences. You can look for yourself. Database is public.

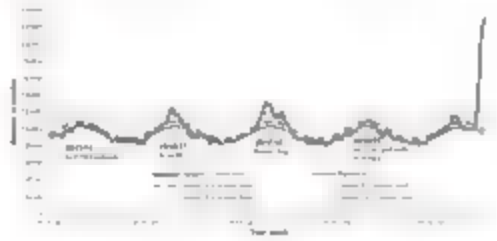
England

23 April 2020 – Week 17 report (up to week 16 data)

In week 16 2020, statistically significant excess all-cause mortality by week of death was observed overall and by age group in the 15-64 and 65+ year olds and in all regions in England, through the EuroMOMO algorithm. In the devolved administrations, no statistically significant excess all-cause mortality for all ages was observed for Northern Ireland in week 16. Statistically significant excess all-cause mortality was observed for Wales in week 16 2020 and for Scotland in week 14 2020.

All-cause death registrations (ONS), England and Wales



- In week 15 2020, an estimated 18,516 all-cause deaths were registered in England and Wales (source: Office for National Statistics). This is an increase compared to the 16,387 estimated death registrations in week 14 2020.

Excess all-cause (EuroMOMO) mortality in subpopulations, UK

- In week 16 2020 in England, statistically significant excess mortality by week of death above the upper 2 z-score threshold was seen overall, by age group in the 15-64 and 65+ year olds and sub-nationally (all ages) in all regions (North East, North West, Yorkshire & Humber, East & West Midlands, East of England, London and South East & West regions after correcting GRO disaggregate data for reporting delay with the standardised EuroMOMO algorithm (Figure 1). This data is provisional due to the time delay in registration; numbers may vary from week to week.

- In the devolved administrations, no statistically significant excess all-cause mortality for all ages was observed for Northern Ireland in week 16. Statistically significant excess all-cause mortality was observed for Wales in week 16 and for Scotland in week 14 2020 (Table 2).

Yes, I've read that. If you separately look at excess winter deaths over last 5-10 years, you will find flu related EWD that can reach 50K. That's all I've said: that the number of covid associated deaths (not necessarily causal) is far less than a routine albeit bad flu season.

Perhaps you can agree; no age group is guaranteed not to be harmed due to covid19. However, the majority of the risk is borne by older people & people with chronic illnesses. Less than 1% of the deaths have been under 60s who were not also high risk. Risk is much larger if old.

A healthy 13 year old boy in London died, they couldn't be with him or attend his funeral. Have you called up his family to tell them that you've studied this and it's fine really, he needed to take it on the chin for you?

You do understand that, before this virus arrived, people died in UK? Between 1,800 & 2,000 every day. A very small number are children, for a variety of tragic reasons, like this poor little lad.

I know you mean well & within limits your post is correct. However, CFR is not a useful measure of lethality in situations where there are a large - & unquantified - no. of asymptomatic cases. Where surveys have better estimates of prevalence, that drives IFR to approx bad 'flu.

In brief, several research groups have begun to assess the % of their population with anti-Covid19 antibodies in their blood. The results indicate that herd immunity is widely in place, the pandemic is self limiting & the infection fatality rate is approx that of seasonal 'flu.

This was obvious from the earliest times. The case fatality rate on the Diamond Princess liner was 1%, in a population that we now classify as vulnerable. Scaling to a population with all-age demographics, immediately the infection fatality rate falls to seasonal 'flu. It's over.

Likely that far more infected than we thought. A recent study in Santa Clara, CA showed 3% of the population had antibodies, indicating they'd been infected.

Two recent studies (Korea and Switzerland) concur that the mortality rate for the China virus is between 0.8 and 1.1%. This makes it between 3 and 6 times more deadly than seasonal flu. Taking no preventive action in a densely/highly populated global hub country would be madness

I disagree. The sources I've seen correctly attempt to estimate the number of infected individuals & when that's done, lethality is very similar to 'flu, either typical or 'bad year'. This is the IFR. The CFR I guess you're citing is always an overestimate if lethality.

I would want each country obtain estimates of seropositivity in samples of their own population prior to full release of lockdown. Note, the epidemiology projections were consistent with low % infected + high lethality OR high % infected + low lethality (Gupta, Oxford).

Ditto. Because “the media & establishment” decided that should be so. Individuals are powerless against that, then as now.

This is if I may say a silly analysis. These live amongst us and are precious to us. Can't simply say shelter for the rest of your life - oh and by the way we are going to clog up all those hospitals you need due to virus spread in our age group.

It's not the data though - it's the conclusions formed of appropriate behaviour from the data. I have no wish to offend. Sadly my parents have died and I am not in a risk group. I have no skin in the game. 780 deaths today whilst locked down. How much worse without it?

I'm sorry for your losses. As a scientist I often had dispassionately attempt to interpret or predict things that could mean life or death. The effect of such attempts is to form hypotheses which can be invalidated (if incorrect). That's how 'the scientific method' helps us.

In my field, applied, exploratory pharmacology, no one can create an hypothesis, which underwrites a new drug discovery, for which the evidence ("joining the dots") isn't available to ones peers. This is because an individual may be prescient but, equally, they might be mistaken.

The first duty in this situation is to attempt to invalidate the hypothesis or, as Prof Sir James Black, Nobel Laureate for drug discovery, said "find the shortest path to the negative answer".

Doing that with covid19 leads us to better estimates of IFR (not CFR) & these in turn suggests a value around that of a bad seasonal 'flu.

In mathematics, a useful method is to assume a hypothesis is false, then disprove whatever that assumption implies (hence proving the original hypothesis.)

Unfortunately, that technique doesn't really lend itself to real life!

FenBeagle @Fenbeagle · Apr 25

But what leads you to think it would have been the case? The only other data we have is Sweden, which followed the same advise that we were given before lock down, but didn't follow us into lock down. Sweden has had fewer deaths per million than the UK.

Yes: what I find more interesting is that the shape of Sweden's time course of illness & deaths is exactly the same as ours. The irresistible conclusion is lockdown didn't impact spread noticeably. That's fine, it wasn't proven beforehand & the Swedes never thought it would work.

That may not in fact be the appropriate data interpretation at all. There are masses of variables.

I agree, it might not be. But Dr Occam has a fair bit going for it. It's hard to think of an alternative explanation that fits the observations as well as 'lockdown has little effect on viral transmission' does.
I don't accuse U.K. of wrongly locking down. I'd have done it too.

Those in the ICU's in New York are suffering from ARDS.

Yes, I had heard that. Obviously since that is nothing like pneumonia, are both end stage presentations? If ARDS, that's a horrible diagnosis since prognosis remains quite poor. I look forward to learning more over time. Thanks.

There is no evidence that lockdown slowed the spread of infection. We assume it, though it's not empirically supported. Inspecting the time course doesn't provide compelling support for the idea that it's strongly effective.

No one's proposing "experimenting on people's children". The publication I refer to studied the spread of Covid19 from a group who returned from skiing in Italy. A child was shown to be infected, but none of the 100 people they were in contact with got Covid19. It's all we know.

That's the case anecdotally for groups of adults returning from ski trips and in no way representative of a school environment. We also don't know that for sure given the high failures in testing. Until we know for absolutely certain it's safe then we should not be taking risks.

What I find upsetting is we want to act in a moral way about Covid19, and that's reasonable, but what we do about not dissimilar risks & circumstances is often so very different & I don't understand why.

Granted flu out breaks cause significant loss, however Mortality is higher for Covid 19, it has a Higher reproductive number, and higher fractions of severe cases. There is insufficient data on Covid-19 and children to draw any serious conclusion on their role in spread currently

That's the case anecdotally for groups of adults returning from ski trips and in no way representative of a school environment. We also don't know that for sure given the high failures in testing. Until we know for absolutely certain it's safe then we should not be taking risks.

I take your point. I still would reopen primary schools. The totality of data indicates there is no unusual risk to these kids. This is consistent with Govts in Sweden & tomorrow, Denmark. We can't do everything by the precautionary principle, because that is killing diff people.

No one's proposing "experimenting on people's children". The publication I refer to studied the spread of Covid19 from a group who returned from skiing in Italy. A child was shown to be infected, but none of the 100 people they were in contact with got Covid19. It's all we know.

Manufactured aka fake news. It's possible to get up any story through selective reporting & collaborating with politically biased participants to make Govt look criminally bad. Fortunately, because viewers have long since rumbled this, it'll have the opposite effect intended.

It's easy to cheat by not asking the named voter what they want to vote for, but by having community leaders fill them in, or instruct others how to do it. It's a gap which should be closed. Like secret ballots for strikes. Remember what happened then? Fewer strikes.

Again, you're trying to conflate Covid-19 with 'flu; they're not the same thing. Also, unlike 'average flu', there is, as yet, "no evidence that people who have recovered from COVID-19 & have antibodies are protected from a second infection." (WHO 24/4/20)

I often mention them together because influenza can present very similarly to covid19 infection and their respective IFRs are likely similar.

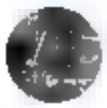
Dear colleague

Significant Alert in respect of Children and Paediatric Shock – For Urgent Action

The following information has been sent to us in relation to children presenting with unusual symptoms. Abdominal pain and gastrointestinal symptoms have been a common feature, as has cardiac inflammation. We thought it was extremely important to bring this information to your attention in primary care.

Please refer children presenting with these symptoms as a matter of urgency.

It has been reported, that over the last three weeks, there has been an apparent rise in the number of children of all ages presenting with a multisystem inflammatory state requiring intensive care across London and also in other regions of the UK.



The cases have in common overlapping features of toxic shock syndrome and atypical Kawasaki Disease with blood parameters consistent with severe COVID-19 in children.

Abdominal pain and gastrointestinal symptoms have been a common feature, as has cardiac inflammation. This has been observed in children with confirmed PCR positive SARS-CoV-2 infection, as well as children who are PCR negative. Serological evidence of possible preceding SARS-CoV-2 infection has also been observed.

There is a growing concern that a SARS-CoV-2 related inflammatory syndrome is emerging in children in the UK, or that there may be another, as yet unidentified, infectious pathogen associated with these cases.

Please do refer patients as a matter of urgency if you encounter any children

Interesting. Given the Kawasaki like profile, it could easily be a different pathogen, especially as cases have been covid19 positive and negative. Also, to date, there are still no official covid19 related fatalities in these younger cohorts. We must remain alert, though. Ta :)

Based on what? You don't do any tests infection rate is zero. You only test the hospital cases you're only counting the ones who got sick enough to go to hospital. Jeez. Come on guys waken up before it's too late.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 27
Sorry? My thinking process is to ignore the cases which present for the purposes of estimating lethality in the population. Good estimates of the numbers who've been infected can then be compared with no of deaths. The chips will fall where they may. Obv, we'd all like a low IFR!

Sweden's daily death rate is falling & has been for a week & more. Their infection peak was weeks earlier.
This means that, whatever their R naught was as the pandemic expanded in Sweden, it's clearly <1 now.
How & why is this, given their took only mild precautions?

They have the government that trusts proper scientists, smaller population, smaller family units, higher public awareness and willingness to protect themselves and others, and social habits that have always encouraged social distancing. Latvia is very similar.

That's great & I agree those are good things.
But you've not answered my question. Believing your Govt doesn't slow transmission. How has their R naught gone from 3-6 down to <1, with no meaningful change in advice (specifically no stay at home advice or order)? Really important.

But it isn't just Tyson. There are many major production plants around the country working at reduced rates.

Anyone who believes that COVID wasn't designed to do just this very thing needs to look at the evidence.

It seems easier to obtain a test than to guess whether the death had an important Covid19 component or not. For example, I can't see how every respiratory death could be coded other than Covid19, even though we know there are a handful of viruses that can kill a weakened person.

Right, you're catching on - so the death rate is skewed everywhere in the world. If the goal is primarily to prevent the virus getting into care homes - what difference does shutting down the entire economy make?! It's the vulnerable who need protection.

Yes. Exactly this. The kicker is that care homes don't benefit from lockdowns. Potentially the opposite. The vectors are the carers & other staff. Residents don't go out so others must be bringing virus in.

Perhaps you're right. Well then, Lockdown even theoretically protects just the vulnerable in the community. And in practice it's not even done that. The shape of the time v daily deaths plots nest for almost all countries whether they chose full lockdown or almost nothing.

That "bad air" theory hasn't been used in at least a century. Like original SARS, early COVID-19 research has shown droplets in the air (especially indoors) are driving a good portion of infections. Fomite (surface) transmission is certainly possible, especially in hospitals.

Look at Sweden's death per day graph, you'll find it has the same shape as ours in U.K. (with fewer deaths).
I no longer believe lockdown sig slows transmission & should be lifted ASAP. Also, Sweden's falling deaths shows CV19 is self limiting. No lockdown or vaccine needed.

1-3 people per thousand are likely to die due to covid19, slightly worse than 'flu, & targets the same mostly elderly & unwell people. Not reasonable that 997 people should bear the risk where for most, there's no benefit.

Over the last decade, WHO & their EU sibling have sought to define measures to limit the spread of pandemic infections. In their own reports, the only ones with even moderate evidence are hand washing & mask wearing, solely in clinical contexts.

An obvious solution to the WHO's self-contradiction would be to limit the measures to those for which the WHO has been able to find scientific evidence of at least moderate quality. These would be hand hygiene and the use of masks (in clinical contexts) - possibly supplemented by measures that the WHO has not studied, but which turn out to be plausible in the context of current empirical studies.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 30

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Apr 30
A less obvious solution, on the other hand, would be to hope for the combined effectiveness of individually ineffective measures and to try to validate this hypothesis in the context of an event that could then go down in the history of mankind as the largest, most expensive..

With all due respect to Gieseckes' past accomplishments, the guy lacks basic understanding of how to deal with uncertainty. While I'm no big fan of the advanced models employed by Ferguson, the conclusion he made helped steer the UK away from a potential catastrophe.

Ferguson's model outputs are consistent with him having chosen an IFR of 1% & an expected infection rate for the population of around 2/3rds. 1% of 50million is 500,000. The 1918 pandemic flu is estimated to have infected 1/3rd of the world pop. It was clear, whatever the WHO...

...the WHO themselves rate the evidence that lockdown - as practiced, not some theoretical possibility - significantly slows transmission as "low" or "very low". So Ferguson's leap downwards uses known-incorrect adjustments. At that point I decided he was way out of his depth.

I don't mind if you rely solely on the ought to work & can cite no empirical evidence.
In short, lockdown is so leaky, it's not forced R0 down.

Why take shortcuts, which make it more likely that errors will be introduced (favouring writing Covid19 as cause of death) while making it less likely that these errors will be spotted & corrected.
I ask because all-causes mortality to week 15 is lower than to week 15 in 2018.

They've no idea what the R rate is. They don't know how long the virus has been in circulation nor how many people have had it. R rate is only based on those tested and most were probably in hospitals - an infection vector.

Yes, this thought was behind my question. I'm an open minded scientist whose measured antigens & antibodies in human blood, and I don't see any way of reliably estimating R0 without a formal sampling & repeat population testing protocol running often in many areas.

Finally, the time course of daily deaths, numbers excepting, show a strikingly similar shape everywhere. I've literally looked at dozens of such plots and they are surprisingly well "nested". Sweden's plot looks like all the others & nests just as well.

No evidence under 10s can transmit virus to adults yet schools are shut.

9 people under 20, 140 under 40 & 2,500 under 65 have died of/with yet nation's economy is being trashed.

NHS is at record capacity.

That is exactly what they are raising. The unmentioned impact it has on people and how that unmentioned impact hits women harder than men

> "There is a real risk that the Covid-19 pandemic will disproportionately affect women and girls. Women make up more than 70% of the global health workers, we are already seeing an increase in gender-based violence, and women are more likely to be in informal, precarious employment which any financial crisis will hit first.

That's really upsetting. The Bakersfield doctor did himself no favours though. He mentioned 1250 deaths and - from seroprevalence data - 4,700,000 infected people. This gives an Infection Fatality Ratio around mild 'flu or 0.02%. That's lower than Sweden's Johan Giesecke...

Specifically, that same 2019 WHO document detailed that when case numbers were low, and transmission also low, that is appropriate. When cases & transmission are elevated, they do not recommend it (because it is too slow & represents a poor use of resource). I'm quoting WHO.

Lovely, but we don't know how many there are.
Nb: testing for virus as it's done is absolutely not = rate of new infections. It'd be more or less depending on who we test & how many.
So, thanks, but that's not a valid way of estimating R0.

No evidence anywhere that lockdown slows transmission in a major way. It's so leaky that it doesn't. The numbers of daily deaths will nevertheless fall, as it is in non lockdown Sweden. Lockdown was never required & should be lifted today. It's definitely killing people.

The inference is that transmission is continuing even under lockdown. It may surprise people to hear that there's no empirical science underwriting lockdown as an effective method to break transmission. Sweden's experience compared with ours is consistent with this.

Non Covid19 deaths must be weighed up when deciding what next to do with Covid19. A decision to change nothing, so as to focus on Covid19, has a cost in lives of non-Covid19 patients. Some calculate # lost cancer & heart pats' lives are as big or larger than saved Covid19 pats.

> Allison Pearson @allisonpearson
> Cancer deaths "will rise by up to a fifth" this year because Covid coverage has terrified people into staying away from hospitals. 165,000 deaths from cancer each year. Plus all the heart condition (170,000 deaths each year) which have gone undiagnosed.

Giesecke continues to think IFR is 0.1% when in certain areas in Stockholm (Rinkeby-Kista) deaths are already higher than 0.1% of the total population
Also, Sweden's FHM estimates of 26% infected in Stkm imply an IFR of 0.25% - his opinions are a total joke

Why do you expect each district to have same IFR? Because you've criticised a local IFR which is clearly higher.
Are there any districts where the implied IFR, on the same basis, is lower than 0.1?
Also, an IFR even of 0.3% surely cant justify shutting the country indefinitely?

Speak says nothing useful, June 20 thinks it is "shocking" that Gay Men's Press has published a book, Dares To Speak, which challenges the assumption that all sex involving children and adults is abusive. I think it is outrageous.

The distinguished psychologists and anthropologists cited in this book deserve to be heard. Offering a rational, informed perspective on sexual relations between younger and older people, they document examples of societies where consenting inter-generational sex is considered normal, beneficial and enjoyable by old and young alike.

Prof Gilbert Herdt points to the Sambia tribe of Papua New Guinea, where all young boys have sex with older warriors as part of their initiation into manhood. Far from being harmed, Prof Herdt says the boys grow up to be happy, well-adjusted [illegible] my friends gay and straight, male and female had sex with adults from the ages of nine to 21. None feel they were abused. All say it was their conscious choice and gave them great joy.

While it may be impossible to condone paedophilia, it is time society acknowledged the truth that not all sex involving children is unwanted, abusive and harmful.

Worldometer lists (today) 1944 COVID deaths in state of California.
A USC study based on antibodies put as a LOW estimate of cases IN LA COUNTY ALONE as 220K, and a Stanford study puts as a low for Santa Clara Co: 48K. The highs: 442K & 81K

SO: hi death rate=0.7%, lo: 0.37%

The WHO's own "flatten the curve" figure shows the same area under both curves, that is, the same number of deaths.
Of course it's crucial not to overwhelm the NHS, but due to their heroic work, that is now no longer a significant concern.

I don't disagree with that. I just found it amusing that there might be "some link" between the National Health Service (basically hospitals and GPs) and saving lives.

A typical winter 'flu is normally credited with killing 0.1% of infected individuals. 0.14% is high and it may reach 0.2 or even 0.3%. That still doesn't justify lockdown which will result in avoidable deaths of tens of thousands from missed / late cancer & cardiac illnesses.

In U.K., the media on all sides have been scaring the bejesus out of the population. I know intelligent friends who are not scientists who are really frightened, all the time.
I say that our media have been appallingly sensational.

There's a lot of global inconsistency in how COVID19 deaths are being counted. Still, comparing COVID19 deaths to deaths in a bad flu year needs to be done later as flu runs November to end February, and COVID19 first cases were mid-February. Check in the summer.

In brief, the last two columns look most useful. Countries never sample, so the cases per million are in part - maybe a large part - a function of the number of tests. More confusingly still, some countries ramp up the # of tests so comparisons v time are even less valid.

That's probably fair. I say probably as we've no way of knowing how precisely we're setting admissions.
I would run random or rep samples of the population daily. It's cheap & we've capacity.
I'd also store serum for antibody testing when screen is ready.

I was initially very keen to know the 'true' IFR. So many people seemed to be confusing it with the CFR, the fatality rate for bad cases. Whereas I took the IFR to be more important, on the assumption that I would eventually be infected. But it's so variable. Age, ethnicity...

Same case in 'flu & many viruses. We can't escape nature until we have medicines with adequate safety or a v v safe vaccine.
If I'm ill, I get risks & benefits of meds. With vaccines, I bear burden of side effects but as not at risk, need no protection (no benefit to me).

COVID deaths and mortality rate are both being overestimated.

A large number of people have reported feeling somewhat unwell these last few months with covid-like symptoms.

Also, COVID can be put on death certificate without a test even being performed.

Believe it or not, you can have a negative test for covid19 & still have cause of death = covid19. You can have a positive test for generic Coronavirus (so reacts to many common cold viruses) and get labelled covid19 death. Soon they'll waive the need even to be dead.

I agree, if the goal is a vaccine for massed use across the population. It's not ethical to vaccinate 99.8% or so of the pop, most of whom do not get not benefits, where side effects are almost unavoidable at low frequency. Really low freq could easily injure as many at it helps.

Mass vaccination for covid19, even if technically possible, is ethically unsound. Huge majority, over 98%, aren't at mortal risk. Yet we'd need to vaccinate billions of people to (mostly) delay some deaths. Even the rarest unwanted effect swamps benefits. Complete nonstarter.

The deaths weren't avoidable. Most who've died would anyway have died next time they encountered a respiratory virus. Even WHO doesn't claim lockdown works, anyway. They've assessed the evidence & it's "low/very low". This is because lockdown is super-leaky (except in China).

Not true. Most as you say would not have died if they hit any old respiratory virus. Risk factors of Covid-19 are known & cause blistering attacks completely different to normal viruses. Some would die, yes, most wouldn't. This bastard virus kills ppl who would otherwise lived

I claimed only that U.K. missed the usual sad toll of substantial excess winter deaths, usually respiratory deaths because flu was unusually mild. Actuarily speaking, they were expected casualties had they encountered flu. They didn't, but the reaper got them later, with covid19.

Actually, all of us are wrong (those who use the lockdown to peak deaths) for or against its efficacy, because deaths are skewed and the peak is poorly defined.

Thank you. Though I'm noisy, I'm well intentioned & poor with tech.
I'd love nothing better to learn that lockdown has high efficacy. It'd justify lost lives it's costing as well as providing good control tools. For now, I regard it as offering neither. Bread & circuses only.

The public is so dumbed down by now that they only grapple w/ one variable at a time ("people getting sick & dying? NO!")

> And the media so corrupt that they manipulate the public with simplistic dilemmas ("Is a human life worth your going to a restaurant?!")& pretend virtue.

I read recently that inhaling other people's exhaled virus-contains droplets isn't an important mode for transmission. It's mostly coughing up bits & blobs (collectively termed 'fomites') landing on surfaces, picked up on hands & transported through hand to mouth contact.

Let's compare TOTAL U.K. deaths for first 15 weeks of:

2018: 187,720

2020: 184,960

So this season is still behind 2018.

Now was lockdown necessary? Many cancer, heart patients, etc will not get the treatment required so they will die in 6-24 months as a result.

I think you might be quoting the Case Fatality Rate? If yes, important to recognise that, with infections that result in a large proportion showing mild or no symptoms, the CFR exaggerates the real risk, by the extent to which infections (the denominator in IFR) are missed.

To the surprise of many here, all-causes mortality in England & Wales up to Apr 22 2020 were 2,700 FEWER than up to same date in 2018 (last significant pulse of respiratory deaths from influenza).

It's science that can help flatten the curve and limit a higher percentage as in Spain or Italy. They're at 7% there, relative as testing is far from complete. Side effect is over-mortality due to overload of healthcare system. This is therefore considerable worse then flu.

I am not of the view that this matters at all. What is demonstrated by doing it is that over 100,000 tests per day are in place. Elapsed time always exists between taking a sample & returning a result, just as there is between sitting an exam & getting told your results.

There is also a deadline to sit an exam much like the 100k target.

Q: How many students sat the exam?

A: 100 (actually only 73 but, we sent 100).

Are you claiming that social distancing alone is responsible for the shape of Sweden's curve? Note, they put SD in place early, yet infections & deaths climbed, plateau'd, then started to fall. Once the pandemic started expanding, R0 must have been well over 1. You claim that...

Last year stats show 17,000 deaths from flu alone. So take that from the figures for this virus and you may be closer to the truth. Ave of all deaths per 100k population in 2018 was 1,000. That's about 11,500 a week. You do the maths.

Muslims are 4% of the pop. I would expect 4% of crimes to be by them, including heinous abuse of kids. I expect the maj of that crime to be by whites. But if it's 40% by Muslims, at least we'd have a start point to address it. Not knowing & official refusals amplifies suspicion.

Surprisingly often we have a notable flu season. Perhaps it shouldn't be a surprise. Measuring excess deaths or flu deaths is harder than it sounds. The numbers attributed to covid19 are probably quite an overstatement. If correct, covid19 won't be distinguished in a few years.

Yes you can't trust the information on there. It's presented in a wilfully alarming way. For instance the total cases are utter nonsense since that number is unknown. Also deaths aren't recorded in the day they happen, this is how they should be recorded.

Thank you. Completely agree with you on cases, almost anywhere. Perhaps Iceland & SK have tested enough or sampled well enough to know incidence. The rest is a function of # of tests & mostly they're self-selecting.

The heinous nature of the crime is not to be excused. However I don't think it's fair to blanket stigmatise Muslims as a whole for the crimes carried out by a small number of them.

It's a great shame we don't have that antibody test. We may well already have herd immunity and wasting nearly £17,000,000,000 a week, plus all the consequential damage to businesses, education, physical and mental health etc with this lockdown.

She's a low throughput antibody assay good for 2K tests per day. A weeks work sampling the country & we will have a much better idea. However, best data will take about a month, because those v recently infected won't display Ab yet. I'm hoping other countries will save us.

Emerging seroprevalence data being gathered in Germany, Denmark, Sweden & the US are hopeful, in that they all show that we've missed 50x as many mild cases as found by PCR, biased due to shortages to symptomatic people.

I am not of the view that this matters at all. What is demonstrated by doing it is that over 100,000 tests per day are in place. Elapsed time always exists between taking a sample & returning a result, just as there is between sitting an exam & getting told your results.

Yes you can't trust the information on there. It's presented in a wilfully alarming way. For instance the total cases are utter nonsense since that number is unknown. Also deaths aren't recorded in the day they happen, this is how they should be recorded.

I've watched it for 30y - as long as it's been broadcast.
It has changed in recent years. It's political, slanted, full of incorrect claims & unwatchable.
You've destroyed a British broadcasting jewel.

Multiple reports indicate that, unlike 'flu, children seem not to be important vectors in the spread of covid19.
You'll note also babies aren't dying of covid19. They do in scores during flu epidemics. Something is different with covid19. It might relate to ACE2 entry receptor.

As, even with a rigid lockdown, 29,000 are dead, and that number continues to grow, plus the high virulence of the disease is attested to by the WHO and all major experts, I see no reason to endanger the lives of anyone by assuming I know better.

Please, think. Without lockdown, Sweden's pandemic is ending, and it cannot be due to mild measures if, as you claim, our much tighter lockdown gave a much worse result.

We have had ~30K deaths. If it kills 1 in 1000 of those it infects, as emerging antibody prevalence data from labs in 5 countries suggests, then we've had 30 million people infected. Note, Prof Gupta of Oxford said this was a possible outcome. This is essentially herd immunity.

It's not viewed as hazardous work, for blood samples are only taken from healthy, asymptomatic volunteers, who have not had symptoms more recently than 4w ago. No virus, just potentially antibodies. I last worked there in 1982.

30,000 deaths in U.K., implying 15 to 39 million infected individuals. Number of dead infants (babies under 1) 0. If any cases exist, we're in the 1 in a million odds. Too low to drive any aspect of public policy upon.

The development comes after public health officials in Switzerland announced that under-10s can hug their grandparents again because they pose no risk to them.

Please note, the Swiss are not known for being reckless. They believe the evidence is strong.

The prof's behaviour is reprehensible but it doesn't change the science.

Had we not locked down 510,000 or more would have died. Even protecting the vulnerable would have meant 250,000 dead.

The domain name says it all.

You should join the medics on the front line as large numbers of people drown in their own fluid filled lungs. Another 693 suffered that fate today. Without lock down/social distancing that figure would be in the 1000s.

No, the website doesn't tell you anything, except the bias you've decided against it.
I don't care if you choose to learn later.
That people continue to die is what you expect during a pandemic. It's a serious virus. It has however nearly finished its horrible journey.

Not true. Most as you say would not have died if they hit any old respiratory virus. Risk factors of Covid-19 are known & cause blistering attacks completely different to normal viruses. Some would die, yes, most wouldn't. This bastard virus kills ppl who would otherwise lived

I claimed only that U.K. missed the usual sad toll of substantial excess winter deaths, usually respiratory deaths because flu was unusually mild. Actuarily speaking, they were expected casualties had they encountered flu. They didn't, but the reaper got them later, with covid19.

I have tried to be patient with Boris Johnson and this government on lockdown. But I'm hearing that one of the ways they want to end this is by using facial recognition technology to see who is leaving their houses and when. Does this worry anyone else as much as it worries me?

I don't like it & will not cooperate for this purpose. I'm well read & am sure that within weeks we won't know a single person who supported lockdown (as well as the 10,000 people & counting who've died avoidable deaths as a direct result).

You're wasting your time on this issue. They don't know the rules on the writing of death certificates nor the need for public health knowledge about the most immediate cause of death which is the virus.

I suspect it won't need to be killed by anything, having soon run out of people close to one another to infect. Unless it mutates, my expectation is it'll vanish, or join the handful of coronaviruses which generally are associated with colds & occasionally kill an individual.

That's fair, and having thought a great deal about this wider topic, I'm certain lifting lockdown will not - could not - plausibly give rise to sufficient number of cases requiring hospitalisation to overwhelm ICU capacity. As said though, I am not the person deciding.

As, even with a rigid lockdown, 29,000 are dead, and that number continues to grow, plus the high virulence of the disease is attested to by the WHO and all major experts, I see no reason to endanger the lives of anyone by assuming I know better.

That logic would hold if lockdown were the only distinguishing variable, but it isn't.I'm not an epidemiologist, and neither are 99.9% offering opinions, so let's still defer to those w/expertise. Rather caution than unnecessary, preventable deaths- and trying to recage the tiger

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · May 5
Agree, it's not the sole difference. It's absence in Sweden, during which time they've not markedly increased guidance, has seen not just deaths peak & fade towards baseline, but R itself is falling. That can only be due to emerging herd immunity. I'm completely serious.

If I may continue this thought. If NY & DC were the only targets on 9/11 why would anyone outside of these 2 cities be worried about terrorism?
As a NYer I get we are not the center of the universe and your implication is childish. It's as childish as thinking it wont spread.

J Pflieger @jesspflieger · May 7
My implication was that nowhere else in the US is as densely populated or relies more on public transportation, which is why the spread is so much worse in NYC. That doesn't mean that every part of the US is at the same risk

We're at cross purposes, I fear. Let's leave it, recognising there have been different policies & practises around the world where it comes to death certification, making direct comparisons unreliable. I expect there'll be after action reviews in the relevant sphere of expertise.

The domain name says it all.

You should join the medics on the front line as large numbers of people drown in their own fluid filled lungs. Another 693 suffered that fate today. Without lock down/social distancing that figure would be in the 1000s.

No, the website doesn't tell you anything, except the bias you've decided against it. I don't care if you choose to learn later. That people continue to die is what you expect during a pandemic. It's a serious virus. It has however nearly finished its horrible journey.

We have had ~30K deaths. If it kills 1 in 1000 of those it infects, as emerging antibody prevalence data from labs in 5 countries suggests, then we've had 30 million people infected. Note, Prof Gupta of Oxford said this was a possible outcome. This is essentially herd immunity.

Please cite a medical report, not a newspaper (unreliable).
30,000 deaths in U.K., implying 15 to 39 million infected individuals. Number of dead infants (babies under 1) 0. If any cases exist, we're in the 1 in a million odds. Too low to drive any aspect of public policy upon.

So basic maths says the U.K. is 10 times more populated in a tenth of the space to Sweden. (joke): Sweden doesn't need a lockdown and social distancing. You're already half a mile away from your nearest neighbour. (Non joke): The UK does need distancing and lockdown.

Density is problematic re ease of transmission; people don't live an average distance from each other. Sweden's capital holds a million people who live more closely together in apartments blocks than many parts of London. Pop density also isn't core to my reasoning & conclusions.

At least 15mill. Use high estimate of infection fatality ratio of 0.2%. 30k deaths implies 15m infections, now immune/resistant. Add 25m with some background immunity from exposure to prior coronaviruses in the common cold. If correct (serology is awaited) we've herd immunity.

The year is 1998, I'm 16 and getting fingered on a grass verge by a train track whilst I was drunk off Hooch and buzzing on menthol cigarettes, no clue this would be where my life peaked.

I've just been out for an hour long thrash of a triple cylinder two-stroke motorcycle from 1977. I owned this very machine from the age of 17. The tales it could tell tend mostly to relate to sex.
This isn't mine but it looks v similar:

The #Covid19 statistics are not accurate. I have a case in my ward where a resident died of Sepsis but has been recorded as having died of #Covid19 - this matters. 1st for the family, 2nd for the integrity of the medical profession 3rd for future planning for Covid.

It's unique to use a respiratory virus ('flu) as cause of death. Traditionally we don't decide cause of death like that (that being the presence of Covid19, thereafter regs make it hard to resist writing Covid19 on the certificate. Usually we write pneumonia, heart failure etc.

As a prof scientist myself (degree in biochem & toxicol, then research based PhD in pharmacol, followed by 32y commercial R&D), let me tell you that Ferguson is no scientist. He's a theoretical physicist/ mathematician with evidently no feel for estimates.

His track record is laughable. On every occasion, he's produced predictions massively distant from the outturn. With that backdrop, how did Ferguson's influence grow so powerful, extending across several European countries as well as USA? Because he's done exactly the same again.

This is expected. If you construct a plot of 'social distancing intensity' against 'date of infection', those who ignored transmission risks were in the lower left bucket, and those who locked down with trend to top right bucket.

That's fair. Viruses are weird & unlike anything else. They're widely considered non-living.
Viruses definitely infect numerous organisms, hijack replication machinery, kill host cells whereupon shed in huge numbers. If transferred to a naive host, they often in turn grow there.

Keep with me. And if lockdown didn't prevent deaths (many, perhaps most of which are in care homes), then we should not have had it and STILL have it. Lockdown has broken the economy 2x worse than the Financial Crisis AND led to 12K avoidable deaths. Most of this is on Ferguson.

So far, there's no serological analyses, so formally we can't distinguish few infections in Norway vs Sweden. It does look like the virus travelled through some of the population because their daily deaths curve looks like everybody else's. I can't explain the v low deaths.

You will soon learn why it is that lockdown didn't save lives. It's a myth. It was never going to work, which is why Sweden didn't do it. Their judgment was that given it wouldn't help, it made no sense to inflict it, with attendant further avoidable deaths from non-Covid19.

We're at cross purposes, I fear. Let's leave it, recognising there have been different policies & practises around the world where it comes to death certification, making direct comparisons unreliable. I expect there'll be after action reviews in the relevant sphere of expertise.

Why are there 45000+ excess deaths now (ONS figures) compared to the same period last 3 years. We had a mild flu season. Also bear in mind the fabled cancer and starvation deaths haven't happened yet? Can't all be people who were going to die this year anyway?

The avoidable cardiac deaths (MI, stroke, aneurysm) are, I'd expect, immediate. I don't know enough about cancer but some do kill fast if not diagnosed & treated (some leukaemias?).

If your health system is as bent out of shape as ours in uk is, you'll need to account for 8000 avoidable deaths per week from missed & not treated urgent cancer cases & emergency admissions for heart attack & stroke. Consultant physicians say they're down 50%+ of normal flows.

France is now seeing weekly all-cause mortality which is fully 10% lower than normal. In a Covid19 year when the virus is still in the population. That's because the already dead with Covid19 would, in a normal year, would ordinarily have perished later in that year.

The early SARS CoV-2 samples contain a protein that is a 100% match for a bat corona virus collected by WIV in 2018. The odds of this happening naturally are very low.

100% match with the sample at WIV means the protein can only have come from WIV, the wild type E-protein won't even match the WIV sample 100% any more.

So if I understand correctly, this virus has been part of studies/experimentation at WIV. It's a naturally occurring virus in origin (in bats), which may have been 'souped up' in the labs to give it the ability to jump to humans?

If so... sh1t!!

Herd immunity is an outcome, something that will eventually mean the virus loses potency. It is not a strategy than can be followed without a vaccine or successful treatment. Not unless you are willing to let ~5% of the population die of the virus alone.

My point still stands however. If 60% of the population is required to get the virus for herd immunity, and we take the global mortality rate, we are looking at well over 1 Million deaths in the U.K.

That is to say the Swedish Gov approach is to accept that covid-19 is endemic and now it's just counted as a normal death. In 10 years time the average death counts will just show that in 2020 the average changed from somewhere around 1700 per day (UK), to 2500

Been saying this here for weeks. Based on reading the data, pre-prints of research papers & commentary by top experts like Prof Giesecke.
Anyone who STILL maintains that "it's lockdown that prevented us having 500,000 deaths & you're a Nazi" might give their heads a wobble.

> Alistair Haimes @AlistairHaimes

Keep with me. And if lockdown didn't prevent deaths (many, perhaps most of which are in care homes), then we should not have had it and STILL have it. Lockdown has broken the economy 2x worse than the Financial Crisis AND led to 12K avoidable deaths. Most of this is on Ferguson.

EuroMOMO shows weekly death rates, which have not only fallen to pre-Covid19 in many countries but, in France, they're running obv lower than typical. That's because you can't die twice and, now that most of the vulnerable are dead, the natural mortality rate is now reduced.

How can it be reckless to permit an infection which kills 1:1000-1:500 people, most of whom are in care homes which don't benefit from a lockdown (because already they don't go out) to move through a population? It won't matter how long you lockdown, the virus will be waiting.

Also, they're completely guessing R. They've no way of measuring it in real time, which they never mention.

Cross purposes & inadvertently using two quantities which are very different as if they're interchangeable. I am not interested in case fatality rate (CFR) which I believe this 3.4% relates to. This is because we never really know how many cases there really are. In circs like...

No, because we have begun a flu vaccination program for 2-11 years old to prevent the super spreaders taking it home to parents and grandparents after we had a huge flu outbreak.

If so, it's not reducing the number of respiratory deaths of the old during the winter. Which year would you say we really got on top of it? I will examine the ONS data carefully.

I'm not a crank. I've been a professional PhD scientist in new drug R&D for 32y. I assure you, I have felt great discomfort with the slowly dawning realisation that we could hardly have made things worse in U.K. if we'd tried. I do not blame scientists, but politicians, solely.

You've accused me of being a crank. I am not offended. To help others judge, would you please pick out one or two things I've written that leads you to that conclusion?
You're entirely free to believe whatever you like, but it won't mean that it's correct. Good day, sir.

Ferguson is an idiot. Serology reports by groups that know what they're doing. Mean value is in the 0.1-0.2% range. We KNEW it couldn't be 0.9%, for it was that on Diamond Princess, and their mean age is deep into the 60s. Factor that into mixed pop, incl youngsters, much lower.

gotcha journalism swatted aside with growing impatience by the FM.

We don't know the R number. It could be estimated by sampling repeatedly but it's so much easier to let whatever value is politically required that day trickle out of the suppurating mass that is Ferguson's model.

This courteously conducted interview is a very helpful view of the pandemic by a British Nobel Prize winner, Prof Michael Levitt.

The interviewer allowed the speaker to make their case without interruption. I recall decades ago this was normal on U.K. TV

France is now seeing weekly all-cause mortality which is fully 10% lower than normal. In a Covid19 year when the virus is still in the population. That's because the already dead with Covid19 would, in a normal year, would ordinarily have perished later in that year.

Of note, the 'flu season was particularly mild this past winter, leaving alive to enjoy a few more months of twilight, until Covid19 arrived, killing the very people now missing from weekly all causes mortality data (because the Covid19 deaths mostly all occurred in a few weeks).

Do you know or only assume they're looking beyond Ferguson's model? I'd love to think they are, but we're moving further away from guidance of reputable experts. We're not using any. If we are, I can't identify them.

...this is not helpful in determining R. This is because we're not sampling when we test. We just test those who show up. Whatever motivates those subjects, they're definitely not a representative sample of the pop. That's who we need to sample to get a handle on R.

I'm know that, but it doesn't have the gotcha implication appear to think it does. Just as in opinion polls, we can estimate something without measuring all of it provided we are able to recruit & test a representative sample. It need not be in more than, for ex., 2000 per week.

Here's a reasonable answer: "both countries are blessed by the small number to whom your question applies. Given the modest numbers, I suggest they consult their consciences or a coin, if they can't work out the best course of action" (muttering "FFS" under her breath).

Respectful disagree. PHE developed the PCR test with the Germans. There was never the political imperative to roll out mass testing unlike in Germany.
